Through his activities in several fields, more especially in Interstate Equities, Mr. Tinker has had opportunity for some years to become familiar with certain aspects and elements of the motion picture industry through Fox and General Theatres Equipment shares. It is also just possible that he has had some whiffs of the aroma of the aged in the wood vintage problems of Pathe Exchange, Inc., which were on tap for some years in the cathedral hall of finance presided over by Elisha Walker of Transamerica, at 44 Wall Street. His entry into the Fox picture may be taken as somewhat of a decision between all-Chase or all-Clarke, since Mr. Tinker has in the past been very Chase and also considerably a friend of Mr. Harley Clarke, who came into Fox via General Theatres Equipment-and-a-situation. The story that he represents William Fox is what the Hawaiians call "Hoo-mali-mali."

Through the working week Mr. Tinker lives in town, working early and late. His office knows no hours and H. G. Fahlbush, his confidential secretary, blond, husky and firm, with a military ribbon in his lapel, had a whole day off last year. Friday to Monday Mr. Tinker spends at his country place on Long Island's Jericho Turnpike at Syosset, where he raises game birds, some 80 varieties of them. He started with pheasants and mallards and then, as things do with Tinker, interests expanded.

Just to show that he is canny, Mr. Tinker lets the native folk's gun club at Syosset shoot a portion of his cover, and that makes them more effective wardens than any payroll could carry. He shoots very little. A shotgun is a reductio ad absurdum in the hands of the man who stokes the incubator.

Mr. Tinker married Miss Marie V. Sollace of Sewaren, N. J., in 1909. They have no children. He has been much given to travel and the outdoor life, with a deal of motoring. Incidentally a considerable scar, which looks like the Heidelberg touch, was acquired in a motor collision at Piping Rock. He is a fellow of the American Geographical Society, a member of the New England Society and a member of many clubs, including: American (London), Bohemian (San Francisco), Metropolitan, India House, Racquet and Tennis, Blind Brook, Piping Rock, Creek, Turf and Field, Williams (New York), and Union Interalliee (Paris).

Broadway and Hollywood are wondering and asking "How long will he be there"? and "What will he do"? The answer is that Tinker is likely to stay as long as he would rather stay than go. That is his record. His job is probably vastly more professionally than personally important. A competency and acres at Syosset with a full-blown, or perhaps more accurately, full-feathered, hobby make it appear that work is with him considerably more of a habit than a necessity, and he has culture enough to get fun out of life without continuing a dollar chase he has already won. It is mental poverty which dies in the harness of riches.

As to what he will do, probably no one can answer, aside from what ought to be obvious even to the involutions of the motion picture mind. It is clear enough to the casual observer that the Fox Film Corporation will continue to require pictures, that it is now the alleged owner of a lot of things yet to be paid for which might be traded off toward a reduction of the debt and a return to the business of making and selling pictures, that its financial structure will bear a deal of overhauling. In his own time and manner it is to be presumed that Tinker will be attending to these things or getting men to do it.

Mr. Tinker is willing to agree that the making of motion pictures is a process unto itself and with problems peculiar to it, but of the motion picture as a business he observes that it would be something in the nature of miracle, if it were not to be governed by the same basic laws as all other business. In other words, he is inclined to suspect that the motion picture dollar is just a dollar, given to the same habits and conduct as all other dollars in the world.

Down in Wall Street they mostly call him "Ned" and some few intimates call him "Tink." Neither of these intimate nicknames is recommended to that breezy element of the motion picture industry which just dotes on first names on slight acquaintance.

Prison Guards Censor Newsreel; Cameraman Held

Some of the best shots of the scene of the prison break at the Leavenworth, Kan., penitentiary taken by Paramount News Reel last Saturday were destroyed at the prison after the sound camera and film were confiscated and John L. Herrmann, Paramount sound news camerman, was held a virtual prisoner.

Sufficient film remained, however, for Paramount to use in its release.

Herrmann was shooting scenes of the penitentiary from a nearby thoroughfare when a guard ordered him inside the prison. His camera and sound equipment were confiscated by the guards and Herrmann with two assistants was held in custody for more than three hours.

In the meantime inmates developed the film and in doing so they destroyed the most important parts both as to sound and picture purposes. Officials retained shots of the penitentiary buildings and of an exclusive interview with the first man to enter the bullet-riddled farm house where three escaped convicts were trapped and died. The remainder was rushed to New York by plane for national release.

The acting warden informed Herrmann it was contrary to the rules of the department of justice to take picture of a federal penitentiary or the grounds.

Silver of Universal Resigns

Milton Silver, who has for the last three years been advertising manager of Universal Pictures, has resigned to accept another advertising position, which will be announced soon. Universal has made no plans to replace him.

Harry D. Goldberg, New York, has been named manager of the newly created RKO Ohio district, including Dayton and Columbus, with headquarters in Dayton. He succeeds Ralph W. Thayer, recalled to New York. Five houses are included in the new district.

ADHERE TO CODE, CHIEF CENSOR OF NEW YORK URGES PRODUCERS

Would Save Time and Money and Avert Threat of Disciplinary Action for Offensive Dialogue, Says Dr. Wingate

Voicing his approval of the Production Code, Dr. James Wingate, head of the New York State Censor Board, declared this week that if producers adhered to its provisions they would save themselves a great deal of time and money now being expended in making revisions of censored pictures, and that New York distributors would be able to avoid impending disciplinary action which is being threatened by the state board to curb what it charges is a trend toward an increase in offensive dialogue. It is understood that the board has given the producers six months grace in which to eliminate objectionable dialogue.

"Producers could save themselves a great deal of time and money by acting as their own censors," Dr. Wingate said. "Their Production Code is an excellent guide and we are thoroughly in sympathy with its purposes. If it was adhered to by producers, our job would be a simple one."

Stringent Censorship Threatened

Dr. Wingate, it was learned, has issued a warning to the MPPDA in which producers were advised that unless the increase in "off color" dialogue is corrected, stringent censorship measures will be taken. The New York board has followed a lenient policy in the matter of questionable dialogue contained in pictures, being reluctant because of current economic conditions to order numerous dialogue eliminations which it considered advisable. The cost of making these eliminations at this time, it was felt, was too serious for precipitate action. However, no decrease in the amount of objectionable material was noted by the board, with the result that the Hays office was warned that disciplinary action would have to be taken unless an immediate improvement was effected.

"There has been a marked tendency in recent productions to use the wisecrack and phrase of double meaning to convey filth," said Dr. Wingate. "This has brought about a situation as serious in its offensiveness as anything achieved during the silent picture era.

"Talking pictures are cleaner pictorially than were the silents, which had to depict rather than tell their stories. Now, however, offensive dialogue is being used to take the place of risque situations depicted in the old pictures, and its increase is overshadowing the improvements made by eliminating from talkies the offensive pictorial matter which was contained in some silent pictures.

"Despite this increase in offensive innuendo and inference, to be noted particularly in pictures of the sophisticated sex drama type, we have refrained as far as possible from ordering eliminations, believing that during such times as these the additional expense of making eliminations and revises is a matter not to be regarded lightly. However, unless improvement is shown, the board will be obliged to order eliminations of all objectionable dialogue, regardless of the amount or cost to distributors."

Material construed to be "immoral" or "tending to incite crime" comprised the bulk of eliminations ordered by the board during the fiscal year just closed, it was revealed in the annual report of the board, just completed.

1,000 More Eliminations

There was an increase of almost 1,000 eliminations this year, despite the fact that the total footage of film reviewed during the year was less than that of the year preceding. A total of 3,031 eliminations was ordered in 366 different subjects censored, as compared with 2,116 eliminations in a smaller gross footage of film reviewed last year. Fourteen subjects were rejected in their entirety, but three later were admitted after certain revisions were made by the producers, revisions necessitating return of the pictures to the studios.

Total receipts of the board for the year were $237,876.72, providing a net revenue of $149,072.55 to the state from the operations of the board. In spite of this favorable balance, it was brought out in the report that the board is in need of additional theatre inspectors, but is reluctant to ask for them due to the financial situation of the state.

The board's jurisdiction embraces about 1,800 New York theatres, of which 600 are in the city of New York. About 14 per cent of the national film distribution is centered in the state.

Following is a summation of the Board's report:

Total footage of film reviewed	8,966,000
Number of subjects reviewed	2,149
Number of subjects censored	366
Films approved without eliminations	1,783
Permits granted without examination	321
Talking pictures approved	1,601
Talking pictures censored	312
Silent pictures approved	198
Silent pictures censored	38
Pictures rejected in toto	14*
Number of eliminations	3,031
Scenes eliminated	1,687
Titles eliminated	1,344
Reasons for eliminations:
(1) Tending to incite crime	1,129
(2) Immoral or tending to corrupt morals	1,165
(3) Indecency	468
(4) Inhuman	243
(5) Sacrilegious	26
Classification of pictures censored:
(1) Dramas	216
(2) Comedies and comedy-dramas	96
(3) Serials	26
(4) Educational	5
(5) Cartoons	6
(6) Scenic	2
(7) Novelty	7
(8) Miscellaneous	8
Total Receipts	$237,876.72
Expenditures	88,804.17
Net revenue to state	149,072.55
Total receipts since organization of commission in 1921	1,991,724.66
Total expenditures	796,538.60

*Three admitted later with revisions.

Expenditures this year were somewhat larger than those of other years, due to the expense of furnishing new quarters and moving the department from its old location to the new State Building at 80 Center street. The board's report expresses some regret over the inconvenience of the new location, which is far removed from the center of film activities in midtown.

Kansas in Arms as "Frankenstein" Is Barred

Kansas is up in arms over the action of the state censor board in barring "Frankenstein" from the entire state.

Protests are said to be pouring into the board from all sides and newspapers are adding their voice to the general resentment. The Kansas City Star editorially declares that while there is no doubt "Frankenstein" deals in cruelty it is difficult to understand how it "tends to debase morals," one of the grounds on which the state board banned the film.

A scathing denunciation of the censors was delivered by John C. Moffitt, picture critic of the Star, in which he intimates that action may be taken to abolish the board.

Governor Harry H. Woodring, who is now in the east, will probably be asked for an expression on this raging controversy when he returns. The board is appointed by the governor. Pointing out that Universal deliberately set out to produce a shocker and is thus exploiting it and that theatres everywhere are discouraging and in some cases prohibiting children from seeing "Frankenstein," Moffitt states:

Law a "Frankenstein"

"'Frankenstein' is out, so it can't be in. But that is only 'Frankenstein,' the movie. As the wires carried the story of the state board of review's decision across the state and across the nation, there must have been many a Kansas theatregoer who asked himself if Kansas hasn't a 'Frankenstein' raised by its own hands in the year 1912, a 'Frankenstein' that has been blindly butting and stumbling about the state for eighteen years, making it look ridiculous and interfering with the taxpayers' simple and inexpensive amusements. That 'Frankenstein' is nothing more or less than the state censorship law.

"When it comes right down to cases, 'Frankenstein,' the most popular picture of the year, is being kept from thousands of Kansans because it is not suitable for children and because three women do not like it."

The picture was barred outright from the state when the board found 32 scenes or sequences objectionable. The parts objected to by the censors, if cut, would eliminate one-half of the film. In a summary, the board stated the film exhibits cruelty and tends to debase morals. The action of the board is based on provisions of the censorship statute.

NEW BRITISH TAX A BOOMERANG; SMALL HOUSES' PATRONAGE DROPS

Exhibitors' Association, Flooded With Appeals for Help, Seeks Records in Forlorn Hope; Musicals Advance in Europe

By WM. H. MOORING, London

After only a month's operation, the new scale of Entertainments Tax introduced by the former chancellor of the exchequer, in order to help meet his budget deficit, gives signs of defeating its own object. For among theatres where admissions are mainly on very low prices, attendances have taken a most disconcerting plunge, and hundreds of the smaller halls are certain to go dark within three months unless they can obtain relief. That a revision of the tax is impossible this side of next February seems obvious, because the House of Commons, in spite of the state of national affairs, is rising for its usual long Christmas vacation, and the governmental shutters will go up definitely for two months.

The Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association, inundated with pleas from its members for immediate action, can do no more than call for the tabulation by exhibitors of attendance and receipts statistics covering a period from November 9 to January 30 next, with comparable figures for the same period last year. With these they hope to go formidably armed to the present chancellor of the exchequer, Mr. Neville Chamberlain, in the somewhat forlorn hope of tax reductions.

Country Being Bled White

In point of fact, it is the incidence of the tax which hurts the trade rather more than the mere fact of an increase. It is one matter to urge, as the former chancellor did, that the British public, realizing that a national crisis had overtaken Britain, would cheerfully pay up. It is an entirely different matter to point a way whereby theatre owners can induce the large working class public to pay more for their entertainment when they already were paying away their last farthings. The truth is that the country is being bled white, and the full fury of the new taxation has been let loose on the middle and working classes, who have further to meet heavy reductions in wages and salaries, at the same time paying distinctly higher prices for daily necessities which have been protected under the new Dumping Act intended to limit imports.

Thus, while the effect is practically negligible on the theatres in large centers, where a moving population with a liberal sprinkling of better class public is the mainstay, those theatres which operate in working class towns and rely heavily upon family patronage are showing anything from 25 to 50 per cent drop in takings, out of which they may have to pay an over-all increase of from 33 to 60 per cent in actual tax.

The effect upon distributors is likely to be devastating, and so far as Americans are concerned will be further aggravated by the adverse tendencies in exchange.

It is likely that the whole film industry will unite in putting up a terrific fight against the heavy proportionate taxation on theatre seats under 6 pence which, prior to the recent emergency budget, were entirely untaxed.

Film Rejection Resented

Gaumont-British executives have become infuriated by the refusal of several leading American distributor-theatre combines to undertake the distribution of recent Gaumont productions, held by the British critics —many of whom are anything but sentimental in their regular comment upon British films—to be among the best films produced by any country at any time.

"We shall never get by the Hays organization in a thousand years, except by employing methods other than those common to the ordinary principle of barter," said one leading executive. "America has told us again and again that we must first make the films, and then try for release throughout U. S. A. Well, we have started, and there is every indication that the one thing which America has no intention of doing is to take these films from this country.

Cites Poor American Product

"In spite of the fact that America is turning out a great many poor pictures at this moment, and notwithstanding that the output from Hollywood has decreased in volume, there is still no disposition on the part of the large chain theatre concerns to open their doors to British films.

"We feel frankly that the only method by which American 'reciprocity' can be achieved is by the imposition of a heavy tariff against the importation of their pictures to this country."

Meanwhile, in political circles, secret negotiations are going on for the early appointment of a royal commission to inquire into the whole situation affecting films in this country, with special attention to the question of American holdings in the industry on this side, and methods employed, or likely to be employed, in protecting and extending those holdings.

Questions Reveal Agitation

An indication of the fact that there is anti-American agitation from within the trade is already manifest in certain questions put down for asking in the House of Commons by M. Ps. who have been receiving representations from certain British interests, included among the members of the K. R. S. and the Film Group of the Federation of British Industries.

One of these questions put to the chancellor of the exchequer November 26 by Mr. Remer, M. P., concerned the amount of money taken out of this country by American film interests. Mr. Remer asked whether the chancellor was aware that 10 American film distributing companies operating through their agents in this country sent between £7,000,000 and £8,000,000 in the aggregate to the U. S. each year after paying their agents' selling expenses. "Was he aware," the question continued, "that these sums were not subject to income tax in this country, though they were mainly profit made in this country, and would he take steps to deal with the matter?"

The chancellor replied that he was unable to confirm the accuracy of the figures quoted, but he would appreciate that the amount remitted abroad in respect of the hire of films would not normally represent profit within the meaning of the income tax acts.

This clearly is a leading question and a reply that directs attention to the possibility of amending the acts to render liable to income tax the earnings of American distributors operating here, on the basis of declared import values.

Points to Tax Possibility

John Maxwell, commenting on the matter recently, suggested that in addition to the advantage of a direct return to the national exchequer, an imports tariff on imported films would place in the hands of the authorities figures relating to the consignment values of American films sent over to British agents, and thus would enable the income tax authorities to collect at least a further £1,000,000 per year, which at present evades them, through a system of passing films from America to Britain on blank invoices, and afterwards charging them up at a figure insuring that the actual profits made by the British agent is low enough to avoid heavy income tax.

Urges Restored Amity

This clearly is the situation to which official attention is being directed at the moment, and the fact that members of the K. R. S. do not share identical views upon the matter is likely to create an unpleasant atmosphere.

I return to my plea. Every day shows up more clearly that the Hays organization —if U. S. is really interested in this market—should make an effort to restore the good relations which until recently existed between America and Britain. And the best way to make a start would be to attempt to break down the unreasonable barriers which American distributors have maintained against meritorious British film product.

Will Evans to U. S.

Will Evans, former Gaumont-British chief, is on his way to New York with, it is said, at least 500 membership forms (or proof of their existence) from independent theatre owners who have enrolled in the Fllm Industries Cooperative Society, of which he is one of the directors.

His object is to convince the American great white chiefs that their distributing agents here in this country—members of the KRS—are subscribing to a lost cause if they persist in standing out on the threatened boycott of this trading scheme.

HAYS ASKS TRUST LAW REVISION; SAYS SATURATION POINT IS REMOTE

President of MPPDA Warns That Success of Business and Welfare of Workers Depend on Reasonable Freedom

Revision of the Sherman anti-trust law and the Clayton act, "to cause the result to coincide with the intent" and, in general, "reasonable freedom for American business to keep itself abreast of changing conditions and to erect a more stable edifice of prosperity" were among recommendations of Will H. Hays, head of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, speaking before New England business leaders on Thursday as the guest of the Boston Chamber of Commerce.

Broadcast over an all-New England network and nationally over the Columbia broadcasting system, Mr. Hays' address, titled "Stoking the Fires of Enterprise," declared the saturation point was remote for motion picture attendance and that "the maximum development of the screen is before it, not behind it." Outlining the scope of self-regulation in the industry he said: "In what we are learning in Hollywood from public opinion in the accumulation of our efforts at self-control, we have amassed a knowledge concerning the public's wishes and have developed a sense of duty that constitute tangible assets impossible to estimate."

On the national situation Hays held that "two groups of opinion, representing opposite extremes—hot heads and cold feet—threaten the orderly correction of present derangements.

"The one group would have us wreck the mill to stoke the furnace. The other would shut down the plant to conserve fuel."

There will be no dole Hays prophesied: "Our spirit springs from Tubal Cain, the worker; not Esau, the quitter."

Pointing out that motion pictures, the automobile and radio, without which the nation "would have to look to its balance sheet" were created where nothing existed before, Hays expressed confidence in the future but warned that "the legitimate successful operation of business and the welfare and prosperity of every workingman and every workingman's family" depend on "reasonable freedom at the hands of government."

"The modification of inconsiderate law, to permit the orderly development of business, is a first and essential step toward the restoration of permanent prosperity in the United States," he said. "This modification affects every American.

"We have had to effect much of the progress of business in face of and sometimes in conflict with a body of archaic law, enacted into statute when the problems of industry were naively simple compared to economic conditions of 1931-32.

"It is the appointed province of legislation to regulate traffic and barter. But no bill of rights, from the Codex Justinian to the Constitution, confers upon government the authority to contain the processes of business in permanent strait-jackets. Such procedure is akin to the practice of medieval Comprachicos who confined infants in earthern jars and left them there to grow in the shape of the vessel, producing synthetic dwarfs for the courts and fairs of the Middle Ages.

"And if we do not take prompt and vigorous action to revise certain punitive statutes, we shall soon find many of the soundest and most essential of our industries similarly dwarfed and distorted by Comprachico legislation through which the economic theorism of forty-two years ago still contrives to exercise control over industrial management today.

"There is a healthy disposition on the part of our national legislators to consider the revision of the Sherman Anti-trust Law and the Clayton Act. This is well."

Mr. Hays described graphically the rise of the motion picture industry and its present importance in the economic scene.

"The motion picture industry was not born," he said, "with a silver spoon in its mouth. It was born in poverty, in doubt and in the courage of men.

"No fairy godmother of finance attended the industry's birth. But in twenty years it has thrived to become a fairy godmother to construction, to all arts and crafts, and trades and businesses and professions.

"In a single decade, this business waif from the side-streets has purchased a billion dollars' worth of steel and stone and cement and lumber. It has become the biggest single customer of the furniture, the printing and the lithographing trades, and one of the heaviest taxpayers in the nation.

"It provides steady employment to a population greater than the inhabitants of some states. Its pay-roll is one of the backlogs of prosperity, and it buys a hundred millon dollars' worth of newspaper, magazine and billboard advertising annually.

"Yet this incredible absorptive capacity for labor, merchandise, structural materials and services wasn't even in the reckoning twenty years ago."

After citing inconsistencies of censorship, which he called un-American in principle and utterly futile in execution, Mr. Hays said:

"The organized industry undertakes to regulate itself by methods more American in character and infinitely more productive of good pictures.

"We have subscribed to three guiding principles:

(1) The screen must preserve its freedom properly to treat the great American themes of life.

(2) We must voluntarily agree upon, and enforce, common bases of standards in relation to good taste and wholesomeness.

(3) Corollary to what we may do within the industry it is necessary to initiate and maintain processes of public education designed to encourage attendance for the higher types of pictures. That is, we must raise the standard of demand as well as raise the standard of supply.

"To these three principles we have adhered and shall continue to adhere."

Mr. Hays outlined the provisions of the industry's Production Code and in the field of improving demand he cited the preview service conducted by various volunteer organizations.

"No greater service," he said, "has been offered to the motion picture theatre-going public of the nation than the service of constructive criticism and selection developed by these leading public spirited interests in this movement to raise the standard of demand for pictures of the better kind.

"In outlining to you these processes within and without the industry which are operating to improve the standard of entertainment supply and demand, I do not blink for one moment the errors the industry has made. All of us in the business are acutely conscious of the dull, the tawdry and sometimes the downright evil that occasionally creeps into pictures.

"Nevertheless, we point with justifiable pride to the difference between pictures now and pictures in 1922. We cite with no self-satisfaction, because our responsibility is greater, the fact that the current of our entertainment offering has not followed certain trends of many popular books and plays. Remember, we have been pulling upstream against a post-war flood of unwholesomeness. We know we have made progress, by the only means that can assure permanence—self-discipline within and stimulation of community cooperation and support of the good pictures without."

Mr. Hays drew a sharp definition between honest criticism which he said the industry welcomed and the self-seeking publicity activities of those who make it a profession to berate the movies. He said:

"None has yet learned to grow wheat without chaff. For every masterpiece of literature, painting or music produced miles of paper have been 'wasted,' if you please; oceans of ink have been spilled, and tons of paint have been put on canvas. Yet the world cannot afford to dam the flow of the creative mind. It cannot order the artist to create an unbroken flow of masterpieces. It cannot determine in advance which of the many brain-children that writers, dramatists and artists hopefully offer should be destroyed at birth.

"In this fundamental situation no industry, artist or institution has more to gain from the give and take of public criticism than the motion picture industry. A vast searchlight of public interest is continually focused on what the screen does, tries or fails to do—the criticism, good, bad and indifferent, that greets every entertainment product.

"When no voice is raised against this or that picture, when no hand is lifted in protest against this or that theme, the time will have come for the industry to pack up and give way to a more vital form of entertainment.

"We have our critics, of course, of the other kind. They have their own box office standards. They are pamphleteers, collecting money for their alleged 'cause,' pulpiteers 'exposing' the movies at so much per lecture, professional carpers courting any and every means of publicity. They have no interest in any intelligent effort actually to raise the standard of the supply, and no desire whatever to raise the standards of entertainment demand. For these professionals I have neither praise nor condemnation. I propose that the industry, by its own intelligent self-regulation and its continually better performance, shall negative the accusations and impractical purposes of even these gentlemen. For the great number of honest and intelligent critics who tell us what they think and who think emphatically and honestly, I have the highest praise.

"The motion picture industry offers a splendid example of the principle that the saturation point is remote for an art, an industry or a service that remains fully susceptible to creative forces. There is a vast distinction between the figures of attendance in motion picture theatres and the number of possible customers. The maximum development of the screen is before it, not behind it."

STRONGER VOICE FOR MPTOA INDEPENDENTS

New Plan to Increase National Board of Directors to Thirty Will Be Voted On at the Annual Convention in February

Initial action by members of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, headed by M. A. Lightman of Memphis, to rewrite the association's constitution with a view to strengthen the voice and representation of independent exhibitors in operation of the unit will be taken at the forthcoming annual convention which is scheduled for February at Washington.

At present, circuit theatres, which in a large measure support the association, have a majority vote on the directorate, with independents in the minority. This would be changed according to plans of Lightman and M. J. O'Toole, secretary, so that independents will have the upper hand in formulating policies and in operation.

A new MPTOA unit will not be organized, contrary to recent reports, members at the Washington convention merely voting on a change in its present structure, the change centering around the election of 30 national directors, instead of the present 10. From the 30 there would be named a governing board of from six to 10. The national directorate would be selected from each state unit, and in drawing the executive committee, voting strength of circuits or affiliated theatre units would be diminished by a fixed poll of circuit power.

"We feel that the new plan will greatly favor independent members," said Secretary O'Toole, "and, therefore, most certainly should be passed. However, decision rests entirely in the hands of delegates appointed to the forthcoming annual convention at Washington."

MPPDA Is Sued As a Monopoly

The Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association has filed suit in Cleveland federal court, charging the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America with forming a combine and monopoly in violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust law.

Forty-six exhibitors, all independent, are included in the association, owning and operating about 80 Cleveland houses. They charge they are being forced out of business by monopolistic tactics of the producers. The suit was filed by Stanley, Horwitz and Kiefer, the exhibitors' attorneys, asking that the "monopoly . . . be declared illegal and the combination . . . be dissolved."

Defendants named are the MPPDA, Will Hays, Columbia, Educational, First National, Fox Loew's Ohio Theatres, Inc., MGM, Paramount, RKO Pathe, Sono Art-World Wide, Selected Pictures, Tiffany, United Artists, Universal, Vitagraph, Inc., Vitaphone Distributing Corporation.

Gabriel L. Hess, of counsel for the producers' organization, said the Cleveland suit "appeared to be an outgrowth of deliberations held between subsequent run exhibitors of that city and E. A. Schiller of the Loew organization, at which all of the points asked by the independents were granted."

Elliott Succeeds Canavan as IATSE President Resigns

Operators and stage hands are determined to retain the present wage scales, it is indicated by the action of the various locals over the country in turning down the rebate proposal of president William Canavan of the IATSE and MPO and subsequently accepting his resignation as president.

William C. Elliott, Cincinnati, one of the seven vice presidents of the organization, has been elected president to succeed Canavan by the executive committee. Canavan handed in his resignation when returns from the poll asking approval of a 36-week wage rebate plan proposed by Canavan indicated overwhelming refusal on the part of the locals. Canavan's term was to have expired in June.

The ascendancy to the presidency by Elliott has resulted in a general moving up one step of the remaining vice presidents. The present setup includes: John P. Nick, St. Paul, first vice president; William P. Covert, Toronto, second; William J. Harrer, Philadelphia, third; Joseph C. Campbell, Oklahoma City, fourth; William T. Madigan, Minneapolis, fifth; Floyd M. Billingsley, San Francisco, sixth. A new seventh vice president will be elected by the executive board shortly.

Gray Given $153,553 Verdict From Eastman in Philadelphia

Charles B. Gray, Millbourne, Pa., whose $1,500,000 suit against the Eastman Kodak Company and its subsidiary, the Eastman Kodak Stores, Inc., of Philadelphia, went on trial in United States district Court there last week, was awarded a verdict on Monday of $153,553.18 by a federal jury. Judge Oliver B. Dickinson presided at the trial.

The verdict represents the actual damages to which Gray is entitled for alleged illegal use by the Kodak Company of his "push button" device for the release of camera shutters. The Eastman Company contended that other inventors had discovered the mechanism before Gray received his patent on September 2, 1919.

Cleveland Adopts Voluntary Plan Of Arbitration

The industry at Cleveland this week effected a plan of voluntary arbitration of distributor-exhibitor differences. The former compulsory system of arbitration was ruled illegal in a federal decision by Judge Thacher, made two years ago, which forced abandonment of the practice and compelled distributors to strike out the compulsory arbitration clause from their rental contracts.

In the first case heard by the new Cleveland board, differences regarding the amount due an exhibitor through failure by the distributor to deliver a picture in accordance with an accepted contract, was amicably settled by three arbitrators, one chosen by the exhibitor, one by the distributor and the third by both. Frank Drew, M-G-M branch manager, represented the exhibitor, P. E. Essick, of the Scoville Essick and Reif circuit, who asked $268 from Universal for failure to deliver "East of Borneo" to the Willoby Theatre, Willoughby, Ohio, as per contract. M. B. Horwitz, general manager of the Washington circuit was chosen by Universal, and W. N. Skirboll was the third member of the board.

Congress Short Sale Inquiry May Reach the Film Business

Names of bear operators and of securities involved, amounts concerned and other particulars are demanded in a new resolution calling for investigation of short selling of securities introduced Wednesday by Senator Capper. This follows a resolution for "a thorough and complete inquiry" introduced the day preceding by Senator Hastings of Delaware. Short selling of film stocks will play an important part in any Congressional inquiry, it is said.

Edythe Meserand Quits NBC To Join American Radio News

Edythe Meserand, executive assistant to "Johnny" Johnstone, NBC press relations director, has resigned to join American Radio News Corporation and Station WGBS in New York in an executive post. Miss Meserand was on the publicity staff of Pathe prior to NBC.

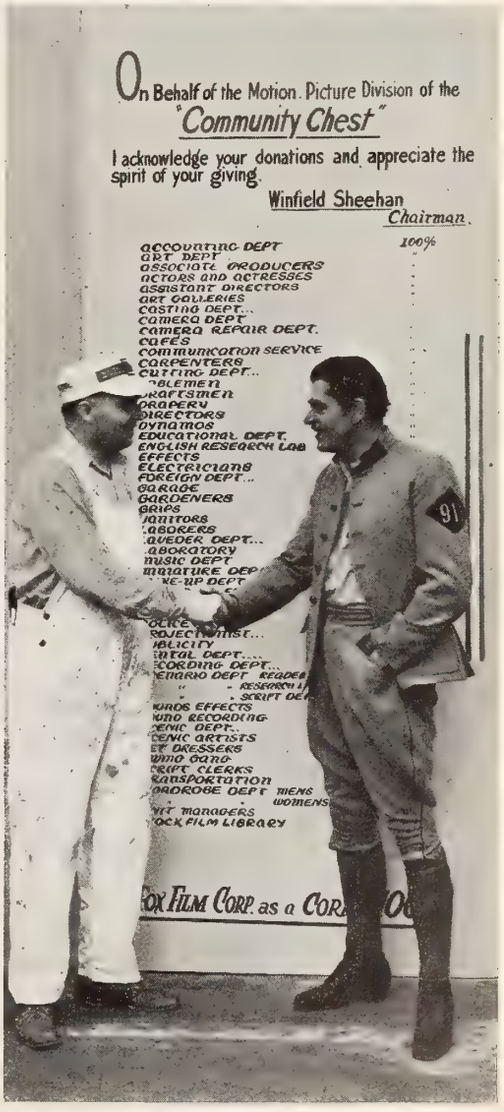
Ezell Operating in Texas

Claude C. Ezell, former sales manager for Warners, back in Texas, is reported interested in several theatre ventures. Particularly, the Duel Company, operating five in San Antonio, is said to be his chief operation at the moment.

Reels to be in Technicolor

Screen Broadcasts, advertising reels, of the Theatre Service Corporation, now in over 3,000 houses, will hereafter be produced by the new Technicolor grainless process, according to William Johnson, president of the corporation.

THE CAMERA REPORTS



CHRISTMAS CARD. Thus does Anita Page, MGM featured player, join us in the season's salutation to HERALD readers. And may we all have many more of 'em (including caption writers!).

VISITING DADDY. An extra-fetching picture of Mistress Mary Ann Elizabeth Brown, as she watched Daddy Joe E. the other day in Warner's "Firemen, Save My Child."

ACTRESS. And another fetching miss, as Universal recently discovered. And as a result of that discovery, Cora Sue Collins will be seen in "The Unexpected Father."

FULL QUOTA. Warner Baxter, Fox star, and Julian Holman of the scenic department, congratulate each other on participation by Fox in a Los Angeles Community Chest drive.

A FAMILY PREVIEW. As the father and mother of William Powell called on their son the other day at the Warner Brothers studio, resulting in this strange location of the star, as shooting continued on his new vehicle, "High Pressure."

BEAUTY PLUS. Plus that vim and vigor and dash of mischievousness that makes Dorothy Mackaill—well—er—Dorothy Mackaill. This is a new study of the First National star (who recently completed "Safe in Hell") by Ferenc.

WHAT IT MEANS NOWADAYS. Taking sequences at sea isn't what it used to be before the advent of sound. For example, above: hoisting a sound truck aboard a schooner, preparatory to a location trip for Monogram's "Law of the Sea."

CHUMMY WITH THE BOSS. Oliver Hardy and Stan Laurel, those congenital comedians, knock off work for a few minutes while Hal Roach, producer of Roach-M-G-M shorts, tries to get a little light on the subject—and making (with that big new type studio incandescent lamp aglow) quite a camera study in the modern manner.

MOTOR LADY. An interpretation of Loretta Young's characterization in her latest role, that opposite James Cagney in First National's "Taxi." The study is by Ferenc, Viennese photographer.

BRITISH DISTRIBUTION FOLK. D. E. Griffiths, managing director of First National Film Distributors, Ltd., Warner-First National unit in England, and his executive, sales and branch staff, with leading members of the cast of "Help Yourself," second picture made at Warner's London studio.

RELICS. Excepting the visitors to this exhibit of Western antiques maintained by W. Parker Lyon on his estate. The table-like structure is a bar (saloon, remember?), and the bottles once contained whiskey (an intoxicating fluid). Donald Cook, Warner player, here poses as a customer, while the "barkeep" is Evalyn Knapp.

FENCER. We were going to say duelist, but we note he isn't giving another fellow a chance. Making, really, a striking study of Lew Ayres, Universal star—who, by the way, has just been assigned "The Impatient Maiden."

M-G-M NET FOR YEAR IS $6,257,998

Consolidated Balance Sheet, August 31, 1931

Net profit of $6,257,998 for the year ended August 31, 1931, was reported this week by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and subsidiaries, after amortization, depreciation, federal taxes, etc. The net is equivalent to $37.71 a share (par $27) on 165,395 shares of 7 per cent preferred. This compares with $9,924,869 or $60 a share on preferred in the preceding fiscal year. The common is owned by Loew's, Inc. Profit and loss surplus of MGM on August 31, 1931, totaled $5,936,723 compared with $4,989,554 the preceding year.

Columbia Institutes Special Campaign Book for Each Film

Columbia will in the future use specially prepared exploitation campaigns on each picture released. The campaigns, in book form, will be used to greatest advantage, it is thought, in spots which Columbia field men cannot reach.

The books are in addition to the regular press books, which will be continued.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

THEATRES at Bay City, Michigan, were all set this week to share with merchants in a much publicized stunt in connection with payment of Christmas fund accounts by banks.

A "This Is the Week" campaign was launched with posters, cards and advertisements pointing out the fact that "this is the best week to spend yours." But the banks picked the wrong week and completely spoiled everything. There were three banks in Bay City on Monday and today there is but one.

In the meantime, the town's citizenry can be seen standing in forlorn crowds waiting to get in the banks for their money, while signs all about them lend a bit of irony with the words: "This Is the Week."

The progressive intrenchments of Pathe News have overtaken Tracy Mathewson, of Atlanta, one of the most famous of newsreel camera men. Mathewson is the only "cinematographer" who has ever got really chummy with the Prince of Wales who calls him "Fatty." On Tracy's last trip to England he was invited to Windsor Castle and made some homelife bits of H.R.H. and the Duke of York. Mathewson was educated for the Episcopal ministry, ran away to sea and sailed before the mast, became a photographer and once started after Shackelton at the South Pole in a straw hat and a palm beach suit. His favorite pastime is shooting Mexican revolutions. Mathewson began his screen pictorial career with the Hearst-Selig Weekly in 1912 and has worked for most of the newsreel organizations variously since.

ON receiving her citizenship papers at Los Angeles the other day, Norma Shearer, ex-Canadian, turned to newspapermen gathered in the courtroom and said: "I shall vote the Republican ticket," and immediately that political organization inherited many columns of free publicity in newspapers throughout the country.

No one should question Miss Shearer's political beliefs, but does it not appear that she took advantage of a most opportune moment to enlist the sympathy and support of many in her vast army of admirers for a political party in which Louis B. Mayer, Norma's boss at MGM, is a most important factor?

Mr. Mayer, incidentally, is much closer to President Hoover and the White House than many suspect.

They ought to charge as high as $1,000 a license to write song lyrics. It's an outrage to think you have to pay $2 to shoot a duck, and a poet can slay the language for nothing, and what's more you can't even get a license to shoot a poet."

Radio sets instead of children are increasing in the United States, the Department of Commerce tells us.

RECENTLY, a certain chap, hit hard by the depression, meekly approached a department dignitary in the office of a national distributor to borrow a few dollars for railroad fare back home. Although he was absolutely penniless, poorly clothed, hungry and cold, he was turned down by the executive in a manner most chilly.

Going back a few years we find the pair as buddies and the present situation exactly reversed, except that the chap now down-and-out spent upwards of $500 to house, clothe and feed the department chief who was then broke and jobless.

Last Saturday, the executive suddenly found himself without a job, a member of the vast army of unemployed which now finds itself face to face with a long, cold winter.

RKO RESUMES BUSINESS, ASSURED OF FINANCES

RCA's Plan to Underwrite Issue Of $11,600,000 Already Under Way Following Ratification by Stockholders

Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation this week resumed routine business activities following approval by stockholders of the management's plan of refinancing at a three-day meeting held at Baltimore where 66⅔% (equalling 1,576,634 shares) of outstanding Class A stock, and all of the Class B (500,000) voted in favor of the financial setup authored by the parent RCA company, which will underwrite $11,600,000 of six per cent debentures of $5 each, subscribers receiving three-fourths of a share of new Class A for each debenture purchased.

The plan reclassifies A and B into one class; reduces A to one-fourth the present number of shares, and calls for payment of $2.50 of the $5 on subscription, with the balance falling due in an emergency.

Brown Gratified

President Hiram S. Brown, after the meeting, said:

"Needless to say, I am extremely gratified at the result of the meeting and appreciate the loyal support given the management by the great body of stockholders. The approval of the plan relieves the corporation of its present financial problems and affords it an opportunity to resume its business with reasonable hope of profitable operations."

Stockholders had been asked to approve the plan in order to avert receivership.

On Monday, the committee on securities of the New York Stock Exchange ruled that Class A must be quoted ex-rights beginning Tuesday, and ordered that all due bills must be redeemed on the same day. The rights will expire on December 21, with the A being quoted ex-rights until the close of business on Saturday, December 19. U. S. stock transfer tax, advised the Exchange committee, would be on the basis of $1.50 a hundred rights. The rights now are quoted on the Stock Exchange, having been moved over from Curb listing when stockholders ratified the plan.

On Tuesday, the Stock Exchange approved for listing 2,750,480 shares of the new common, of which 720,073 shares would be issued for the present Class A and B stocks; 290,407 would be reserved for issuance in place of A stock which was reserved for conversion of outstanding bonds and preferred, and 1,740,000 shares would be deposited with J. & W. Seligman & Co. in connection with the offering to stockholders of the new common and ten-year six per cent gold debentures.

Boyd Files Second Petition

Meanwhile, J. Cookman Boyd, a stockholder, who previously filed a petition at Baltimore seeking a receivership in equity, filed a second petition in Circuit Court at Baltimore asking that the court restrain the corporation from taking any action on the new refinancing plan. Judge Alfred Owen signed an order directing RKO to show cause on January 4 why petition should not be granted.

The petition asks that proxies be impounded and charges that the stockholders' three-day Baltimore sessions were held illegally.

Mrs. Caroline Kohl, of Chicago, another stockholder, likewise seeks an audit of the proxies in the belief that the management did not have the sufficient two-thirds needed for ratification. George E. Schein, Chicago attorney and counsel for Mrs. Kohl, claims he represents 200,000 votes, including the Kohl stock.

Senator Clarence C. Dill, of Washington, announced this week at the Capitol that he intends to continue with his demands for a Congressional investigation of the entire refinancing plan. He seeks, through the Committee on Banking and Currency, to find out where the small holder "gets off."

Tri-Ergon Patent Demand Is Upheld

Judge Jesse C. Adkins, district supreme court, Washington, rendered a decision last week which, it is thought, may have an important connection with the future of sound pictures. He ruled that the patent office must grant a patent on an invention of the American Tri-Ergon Company, which had previously been refused.

The device in question is a small photo-electric cell, of the type in general use for sound reproduction. Granting of the patent gives Tri-Ergon the right to demand royalties from all present users of the device, of which there are a number, including large companies. The court held that the device is an entirely new invention. Josef Engel, Hans Vogt and Joseph Massole, all of Germany, were plaintiffs in the case.

Technical Unions Veto Studio Proposal That They Take Cut

Various studio technical unions have rejected on the Coast the producers' request that they take a cut. Camermen were asked to approve a 60 per cent cut; carpenters and electricians one dollar per day less, and scenic painters a 20 per cent cut.

The meeting to decide whether or not the camermen's cut would be approved was attended by 680 photographers.

Projection School Charged With Theatre Intimidation

Marion Bell, one of six defendants accused of hurling tear gas bombs in Seattle theatres and assaulting union pickets, related in court how a purported school for projectionists allegedly carried on a systematic program of intimidation and attacks.

The "school" is called the "Pacific Coast Institute of Motion Picture Engineering," operated by Wallace Kelso. The men are being prosecuted under the anti-bombing act of 1927, and Bell turned state's evidence.

Alperson, Sears Back After Tour Of Western Keys

E. L. Alperson, general sales manager and Gradwell L. Sears, western sales manager of Warner-First National, returned to the home office this week after an extended tour which embraced exchanges over the entire western part of the country.

Among cities visited were Milwaukee, Kansas City, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Salt Lake, Denver, Omaha, Des Moines, Minneapolis, St. Louis, Memphis, Oklahoma City, Dallas, New Orleans and Charlotte.

Alperson announced that six pictures will be released in January and six in February.

"One thing was proved anew and that was that good pictures have done business in the past, are doing it now and will continue to do it in the future," said Alperson. "I found more good will shown by exhibitors everywhere. They all seem to take a greater personal interest in what we are doing and propose doing. It is becoming clearer that we are working and planning for their interests and they are appreciating this fact."

Sees Unit Plan Effective in '32

John R. Freuler, president of Big 4, has expressed the belief that the "relinquishment of circuit controlled houses to independent owners, the possibility of darkening others to combat overseating, and other measures of readjustment" are necessary in building the industry's new policy of limited output.

Freuler, advocating unit production, with emphasis on quality rather than quantity, says, "Curtailment of production will automatically adjust exhibition at its source, leaving no topheavy liabilities."

C. King Charney, formerly with Agfa Films, has signed a contract as general manager of the Universal Laboratories on the Coast, effective January 1. Pushing Theatre Construction

Warners' theatre circuit is pushing rapidly the completion of several new theatres, with the Warner in Ridgewood, N. J., the Warner in Nashville, Tenn., and the office building and theatre in Mansfield, Ohio, nearing the final stages of construction.

VOTE CONFIDENCE AT WARNER MEET; PLAN ADOPTED, DIRECTORS RE-ELECTED

Plan of the Warner Executives Places Stated Value of Its 3,801,000 Shares of Common Stock at $5.00 Each

Stockholders of Warner Brothers, meeting at Wilmington this week, placed their stamp of approval on the management, voting it their confidence and approving the plan of Warner executives which places the stated value of 3,801,000 shares of common stock outstanding at $5 per share. The entire board of directors was re-elected, including President Harry M. Warner; Vice-presidents Albert and Jack L. Warner; secretary Abel Carey Thomas; general counsel Waddill Catchings and Henry A. Rudkin.

The meeting further emphasized the independence of Warners, under the present regime, from the banking interests with which the company formerly was connected and from which it severed relations several months ago. Since then the brothers Warner have guided the company's financial structure and development with funds of their own and announced this week, through Harry Warner, that they are prepared to spend all of their own money and are in a favorable position to borrow more if necessary.

The proposal to fix a stated value of $5 a share on the common, stockholders were told by Harry Warner, is to prepare the company to meet any future emergency and immediately raises the corporation's surplus from an approximate $300,000 to $60,000,000. It was stated that the company's common never had a stated value and that all cash heretofore received for its stock was considered solely as capital.

Vote of Confidence Given

George A. Casey, a stockholder of Wilmington, made a motion for a vote of confidence which was approved unanimously by the 170 stockholders present at the meeting, in the presence of Harry and Albert Warner and Secretary Thomas. Casey told his fellow stockholders that it was the duty of all to boost the company and disregard any "unfair remarks" about its stability. At the meeting, stockholders and proxy holders voted 2,136,000 of the corporation's outstanding 3,801,000 common shares.

In speaking before the stockholders, Harry Warner said:

"There are none who can attack our honesty and sincerity. They will not attack a good name that we have worked to build and establish for many years. We will spend what we have and what we can borrow to fight back."

"I know the reputation of the men who bring these suits against our company, but we will fight," he said in discussing the receiver complaint. "I have never been in Wilmington before. I have been too busy. One of my brothers died working for your company and mine. They carried him out of the studios to the hospital. My son died working for the company. I had always had an ambition to develop that boy of mine so that he could carry on when I was gone. But now he is gone.

"We have no secrets in our business. If the company is not molested by individuals who are not serious in their intentions, our business is so arranged that, barring an act of the Lord, it will succeed against all competition."

Highlights of a week of pronounced activity in the corporate affairs of Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., follow:

1. Annual stockholders' meeting at Wilmington.
2. Adoption of the management's plan to fix the value of common stock at $5 per share, increasing surplus from $225,000 to $60,000,000.
3. Assurance by executives of company's financial stability. $4,000,000 in bank.
4. Denial of charges in "nuisance" suit for receivers.
5. Vote of confidence in management and directorate by stockholders.
6. Reelection of entire board of six directors.
7. Wall Street authority predicts Warner prosperity in second quarter just started.

No Plans for Use of Surplus

When the proposal to fix the stated value of the corporation's common stock came before the meeting, Harry Warner was asked what the corporation planned to do with the approximately $60,000,000 surplus which would be created, in addition to the present earned surplus of $300,000. After former Federal Judge Hugh M. Morris and Thomas, of counsel, explained provisions of the state corporation law, Warner told the stockholders that the directors had made no plans whatever.

He and other officers stressed that it would be to the best interests of the corporation to establish the capital surplus proposed. Thomas said that while directors had made no decision as to what would be done with the surplus created, two things which could possibly be done would be reducing the $8,000,000 goodwill item to $1 and retirement of the preferred stock by purchase in open market. The preferred stock is selling from $8 to $10 a share.

One stockholder asked Harry Warner if it were true that he was receiving a salary of $10,000 weekly from the corporation. This question brought a smile to Warner's face.

"Of course not," he replied. "The salaries received by myself and my two brothers combined do not total $10,000 a week. But Jack may be worth that much. I think you could take Jack to a competitor and he would draw $10,000 a week or more."

Another stockholder asked if the corporation had cut salaries of officers and others. "Twenty-five per cent," he replied. "If the day ever came when the corporation needed the money it was paying me it would be welcome to it all. I would give it up gladly."

Officers Give Assurance of Company's Financial Stability; Has $4,000,000 in Bank; Charges in Law Suit Denied

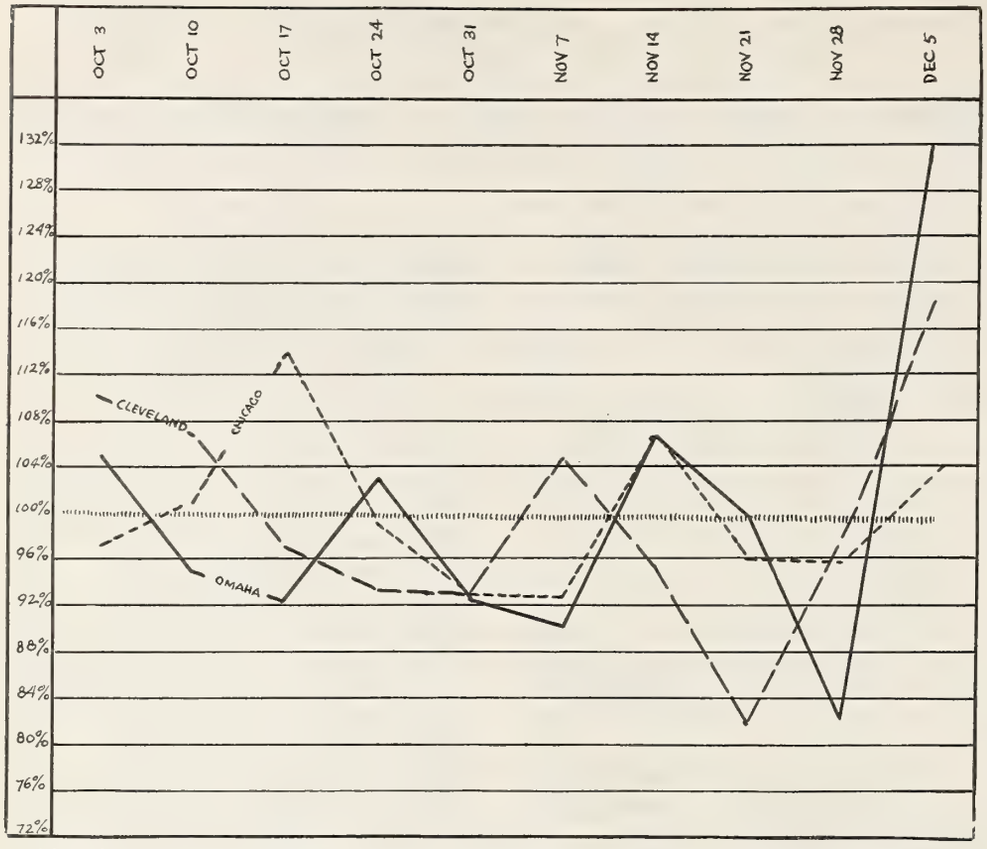
Deny Receivership Charges

The receivership application filed in chancery court in Wilmington by one Jules Endler of Passaic, N. J., was touched upon briefly by executives presiding at the meeting. They said the action was without merit and stated that they are prepared to "go to bat" on the suit, planning to request an immediate hearing before Chief Justice James Penneweill.

In their answer filed at Wilmington on Monday, a sweeping denial of all charges was made by former Judge Morris, representing the corporation. Warners have upwards of $4,000,000 cash in the bank and a well established bank credit, the answer states, pointing out that the present structure and affairs of the company will not necessitate making use of any part of this bank balance.

Not only has the company paid all obligations at maturity or prior to maturity, the answer states, but it is discounting all its current bills that it seems advantageous to discount.

The answer denies that any shares of common or capital stock stand in the name of Jules Endler and declares that the complainant is not the owner or holder in his own right of any shares of the company's common stock.



Says Endler Not Owner

The allegation that losses during the past year were greater than those reported in the last annual statement is denied as is the charge that the corporation's losses have created a condition of insolvency. It is denied that the corporation purchased the musical division of the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company at an exorbitant price and through the purchase has suffered irreparable loss.

It is denied that the corporation has unsuccessfully made an effort to sell the musical division at a price of $8,000,000 less than the purchase price. It is admitted that in April, 1930, the corporation purchased all the outstanding capital stock of the Brunswick Radio Corporation.

Admission is made that some of the theatres owned by it and its subsidiaries are closed temporarily, but only as a matter of sound business policy particularly under present economic conditions. The corporation alleges that closing of some of its theatres under the conditions now existing has resulted in financial advantages to the corporation, subsidiaries and stockholders. It is denied that the company has lost any con-

FLORIDIANS WINNING FIGHT ON CARNIVALS

Mayor and Commission at Orlando Refuse License to Tent Show; Civic Units and Press Joins Cause of the Exhibitors

The fight of exhibitors in Florida, led by E. J. Sparks of Consolidated Theatres, Inc., at Jacksonville, and aided by civic organizations, to overcome the unfair competition of tent shows brought a victory this week in a decision at Orlando which is being hailed throughout the state as the opening wedge in clearing up a situation that has been a plague to theatre owners.

On the ground that his tent did not comply with the city building code of Orlando, Billy Wehle, manager of the Billroy Comedians, was denied a permit. Attending the conference were Mayor James L. Giles and C. P. Dickinson, representing the city.

The Evening Reporter Star quoted Mayor Giles as follows:

"I'll say quite frankly that I think the shows take more money out of town than they bring in and the sentiment of merchants is against them."

The widespread nature of the fight of the exhibitors for fair competition is evidenced in a report on the situation by Sparks to Sam Dembow, Jr., at Paramount in New York. Sparks said in part:

"We have fought harder this year than ever in our history to see that tent shows playing Florida towns paid the license tax imposed by law.

"Due to bad conditions nationally, tent shows and carnivals are having tough sledding and more of them are in this state and have headed into this state this year than ever before.

"Our losses have been and are so great that we have been making a determined fight to see that they pay the proper license tax. It has cost us considerable money but we have waged a real battle. A concerted effort is being made on the part of the Merchants' Association, newspapers, civic clubs, Chambers of Commerce, etc., in connection with ourselves, with the result that organizations which formerly sponsored under their auspices these shows are reluctant to have any connection with them in the face of the present adverse publicity and also in the face of the fact that they themselves are being told in the proper manner what an injury they commit against not only the theatre interests but all businesses.

"The people of this state are tired of the inroads made into the businesses of this state through these unlicensed (for the most part) itinerant attractions to the point where they don't even want them licensed."

Allied May Supply Low Price Trailers To Own Members

A plan to supply Allied States exhibitors with independent made, low price trailers has been announced by Abram F. Myers, president, and is being developed by H. M. Richey, general manager of Michigan Allied.

If the plan materializes, production of the trailers will be handled by Morris Kaplan of Detroit, it was learned. Kaplan was in charge of the local newsreel handled by Allied theatres in Detroit until it was discontinued recently, owing to a disagreement with Detroit newspapers. Free listings of the Allied theatres and their programs were carried in the Detroit dailies in return for advertising of the dailies in the local newsreel. The reel was discontinued when the dailies failed to renew the agreement and sought to collect for the theatre listings.

Richey reports that "nothing definite" has been decided on the trailer plan as yet, but expressed the belief that "the first of the year" might see some developments. New York home offices of national trailer distributors said that they did not see how any appreciable savings could be effected on trailers, as there are now available several types of extremely low-priced trailers.

5,000 Seats Seen As Uneconomical

Alexander S. Kempner, many years in charge of real estate for Fox Theatres Corporation, and former vice president, has resigned to open his own office for the handling of theatre real estate.

"The trend is definitely toward the 3,000 seat house," Kempner said. "It has been demonstrated that the 5,000 seat theatre is not economically sound, and I doubt if additional theatres of this type will be projected."

Donald Thompson To Make 12 Features for Malay States

Donald C. Thompson, war correspondent and photographer, departs from Los Angeles on January 1 for Singapore where a unit, now being organized at Hollywood, will make 12 feature talkers in Malay, the first to be "Singapore Kate"; story by Irving Kaye Davis.

Singapore will be the base of operations, with distribution in Java, Sumatra, Straits Settlements and Malay States, in which 70,000,000 speak one language.

Sarasone Offers New Sound Screen Direct to Theatres

A new sound screen said to be flameproof, seamless and which, it is claimed, amplifies and clarifies vision and sound, is announced by Sarasone Screen Company of Boston. Draper Brothers executed the design, which will be sold direct to theatres, eliminating the regular channel of theatre supply dealer.

We Write a Letter to The Times men and money and costly ability than a really good, go-getting city editor.

Now a little high-powered efficiency could readily ruin a good newspaper. Every once in a while it does. Also some of the same treatment has considerably impaired parts of the motion picture production machine.

Spendthrifting in creative work sometimes pays out. The spectacular performance in any field is unlikely to be associated with what business experts would call sanity and good judgment.

The week ago Monday the Times itself presented a charming evidence of accidental achievement growing out of what was doubtless a casual little bit of spendthrifting. That issue presented a gem of a story on "excavation looking" based on some reporter's Sunday survey of the scene of the breaking of a water main in the Radio City sector. The story was a delight. It occupied the major fraction of a column and contained not a jot of a line of importance, and yet it was in the judgment of not a few readers one of the best Times stories of the year. The unique character of the story and its presentation in the Times proves it was not a preordained product. With no actual knowledge of the facts, an experienced observer would venture the guess that some assistant city editor coming down on Sunday afternoon to handle the assignment book found himself overloaded with high-priced staff and by way of clearing the book and the office sent some $200 a week newswriter off to cover a leg assignment fitting for a $25 a week "cub." It is a common, wasteful procedure in local rooms. It is spendthrift in the extreme. But in this instance the reporter, being a person of skill and inspiration, came back with nothing and wrote a masterful piece about it. And so is waste justified. No dollar that the Times spent editorially that Sunday afternoon was nearly so productive.

Please be patient with our movies. They mean well, and they're not grown up yet. They'll make good yet. See if they don't—about A.D. 2396. TERRY RAMSAYE

RCA Defendant in Anti-Trust Suit for $15,000,000 Damages

The Raytheon Manufacturing Company of Cambridge, Mass., has filed suit charging restraint of trade against Radio Corporation of America for $15,000,000 in the federal district court of Boston. The plaintiff states it has been damaged to the extent of a sum above $3,000,000. Under the Sherman anti-trust act, triple damages are recoverable.

The defendant is declared to have "conspired with several independent owners of letter patent and of devices for radio receiving apparatus . . ." as a result of which competition in the manufacture and sale of receiving-set tubes was destroyed.

Named Warner Supervisor

Ben Cooney, former manager of the Warner Kenosha, Milwaukee, has been named supervisor of three of the company's local neighborhood theatres. The circuit is on the air three nights each week, offering a dinner hour program.

FROM HOLLYWOOD

by LEO MEEHAN

Action, and plenty of it, has followed the recent conferences here of New York and Hollywood executives of the industry. As we predicted, there has been nothing in the nature of a concerted plan or system followed. Each studio organization is attending to the problem according to its own requirements or situation, but in general it is production curtailment, salary cuts, unrenewed options and general economies of operation looking to the reduction of negative costs and the elimination of wastage.

I have seen a number of these "retrenchment periods" in the past 10 years. "New brooms" have been seized and wielded vigorously on several occasions, but after a few weeks, or months, the old familiar faces usually were found in one spot or another, drawing just as good, or better, salaries. Social and political wires had been successfully pulled by those temporarily dropped, and things were all serene, as before.

When the present economic typhoon hit Hollywood, there were many of the wise guys who predicted a similar result. "Same old stuff," they said. "It will all blow over in a few weeks. After all, who they gonna get to make the pictures, eh?" But even the smart ones are getting dubious now. Expensive lunching spots frequented by the movie crowd have had to sharply cut their prices. The boys and girls are saving what they have, if anything. Too many of them have been called upon the carpets and told "cold turkey" that if they didn't take the cuts proposed they were out, and if they thought they could get their present salaries at other studios, take a look around and see just what was happening at these other places! So a majority of those who are "in" are burying their pride, or ego, or whatever it is, and taking the cuts, resentfully or otherwise. While those who are out—well, they find that other spots where they'd hoped to make connections aren't hiring any new help—or old help, either.

The end of the year will see three big plants standing practically idle, dismantled, unused except for possible emergencies. The biggest and most familiar is the great Fox studio on Western Avenue, for many years one of the busiest spots in the industry. From Winfield Sheehan right on down the line, those still retained on the payroll will move to the Fox Movietone City plant in Westwood, just beyond Beverly Hills. Only the film laboratory on Western Avenue, in a concrete building with large special equipment which cannot be moved, will continue in use. It will be something of a job to consolidate all activities in the Movietone plant, and space is likely to be at a premium, but it is going to be done. The Pathe plant in Culver City is being closed up as rapidly as current productions are completed, and will be almost completely shut down before Christmas. Thus the plant made famous by Thomas H. Ince and, later, Cecil B. deMille, becomes a roosting place for bats instead of the famous Pathe rooster. Except for emergency uses, the big Warner plant on Sunset boulevard has been idle for some time. Since the First National plant in Burbank is plenty big enough for the Warner activities, this property is likely to remain silent, too.

Two important theatre operators have figured in Hollywood's news of the week. Harold B. Franklin came to a parting of the ways with Howard Hughes and left the Hughes-Franklin circuit with the announced intention of devoting himself to the operation of the Los Angeles Paramount and United Artist theatres. Sid Grauman, famous impresario of silent days, builder of the Million Dollar, the Egyptian and Chinese theatres, is returning to active motion picture theatre management at the Chinese. He will assume charge of the big Hollywood first-run house with the opening of MGM's "Hell Divers." This probably will be about Christmas time.

Both sides of the Franklin-Hughes split are reluctant about saying very much. However, it is understood that Franklin became dissatisfied by what he regarded as Hughes' lack of interest in the theatre projects, and what he considers failure upon Hughes' part to live up to the original financial arrangements. Hughes has drastically curtailed his operations in production and Multicolor, and it is not unlikely but that he felt the same way about the Hughes-Franklin theatres. Franklin, on the other hand, declares that the entire circuit was in good shape, considering general conditions. California houses were taking care of themselves, he said, and while the Texas circuit was having some difficulty, it was only slightly in the red. However, it is reliably reported there are heavy financing obligations to be met the first of the year, and there is considerable speculation as to how and by whom. Closing, or return to original owners, is predicted for some of them.

Howard Hughes was away when Franklin resigned, and no action will be taken until he returns. Noah Dietrich, representing him, called attention to the fact that four years of Franklin's five-year contract are still to run, but refuses to predict whether or not Franklin will be asked to continue.

W. R. Marshall, former Paramount exchange manager, has been appointed special sales supervisor of Caddo productions by Hughes.

William Fox also landed back in the theatre business via Broadway, Los Angeles, during the week. His brother-in-law, Jack Leo, came here to take over the financially stranded Los Angeles theatre for the Gumbiner management. Being one of the principal creditors, and lessor of the land upon which the theatre stands, Fox probably was forced into the spot. Jack Leo announced he expected to make a thorough survey of the whole situation before deciding plans of operation.

Economics, Politics Obstruct Tax Plan

already paying, they can get into the theatre business on a large scale very quickly. If the Federal Government or any state government wants to go into the theatre business and develop the theory of government ownership, just let any state or the federal government offer the owners of those theatres to give them 10 percent or even 5 percent of their gross intake for their investments and they can get every theatre in the United States signed over to them immediately.

6—At this time, there is not a theatre in America making a profit of 5 percent of their gross intake, and the majority of theatre owners in the United States would be tickled to death to have the State government or Federal government take over their theatres, pay the exhibitor a fair salary for running his theatre, and give him 2 percent or 3 percent of the gross intake of that theatre for his investment.

7—THEREFORE, how can the theatres assume this tax, and stay in business? It is very apparent they can't. The answer to the present taxation problems can be expressed in one paragraph:

8—CUT DOWN THE COST OF FEDERAL AND STATE GOVERNMENT WHICH HAS INCREASED 325 PERCENT IN SIXTEEN YEARS AND WHICH HAS ALREADY REACHED THE STAGGERING TOTAL OF THIRTEEN BILLIONS OF DOLLARS WHICH IS MORE MONEY THAN WE HAVE IN CIRCULATION AND EXCEEDS THE ANNUAL VALUE OF OUR CROPS!

Get Citizen Help, Lightman Urges

M. A. Lightman, president of the M. P. T. O. A., has issued to exhibitors the following declaration against the proposed 10 per cent federal admission tax:

"Direct taxation on motion picture theatre admissions is most unfair as it places the burden upon the man of average circumstances and in many instances upon the very poorest, as the motion picture theatre caters to the masses.

"Obviously, taxation should be so designed as to be derived from the nation's wealth in proportion to its distribution. If for no other reason this tax is manifestly unfair.

"Secondly, the motion picture institution is essential to a community. The educational value and the general benefits derived from it are of such significance that anything designed to cripple them is unpatriotic and tends to handicap civic advancement. Then, too, why should not the welfare of the motion picture industry be considered? Is it reasonable to single out certain industries and burden us in a crisis like this when the load is so heavy now that it is only with difficulty that we can keep going?

"If it is fair to tax admissions to a theatre why is it not fair to tax every commodity of any kind for which an exchange of money is necessary?

"Exhibitors of the nation should rise up in arms against this drastic proposal. The power of the screen should be utilized to its utmost to combat this thing.

"The citizens of your community should virtually be commanded to come to our defense by storming the capitol with letters of protest. Exhibitors, you must respond. Have thousands of your customers write, wire or phone your congressmen protesting against this unfair proposal. If you depend upon the other fellow, we are sunk. Get busy!"

Dear Sir:

I have just sent the following telegram which surely can do no harm and explains a situation confronting many small town exhibitors right now:

"Chairman Collier,
House Ways and Means Committee,
Washington, D. C.

"Heartily approve your stand opposing additional taxes on small business. Have spent twenty years in small town theatre and paid burdensome taxes during and after late war.

"An admission tax imposed at this time would most certainly close many small theatres. Business can only stand so much and a very little more burden right now will close shop for thousands.

"J. H. MILLER,
"Rex Theatre"

Exhibitors are looking to you to assist in every way possible and we thank you heartily for past and present efforts.

Sincerely,
(Signed) J. H. MILLER

Railway Express Reduces Air Rates

A new schedule of air express rates, representing a marked reduction from former charges, in some cases as high as 50 per cent, has been announced by the Railway Express Agency and five air transport companies involved. The new rates become effective December 16th. The new rate scales are based on weight in one-half pound units, bulk in cubic inches, and distance moved.

A great deal of film shipments and mail of all types having reference to the conduct of the motion picture business regularly travels by way of the air mail routes.

The minimum rates for air express packages have also been changed, now being $1 on shipments up to approximately 300 miles; $1.25 on those up to 1,500 miles and $1.50 on packages shipped 1,500 miles and over. Approximately, all of the rates are based on the air travel per pound for each 100 miles, the basis being made slightly lower the longer the journey. The former minimums were based on the one-pound package rate, which in the case of transcontinental shipping by air, were $2.60, as against $1.50 under the new schedules.

tracts with any producer supplying popular pictures.

The answer declares that the company is able adequately and properly to provide and has adequately and properly provided pictures of the type and caliber that appeal to the theatre going public. It is denied that exorbitant and prohibitive salaries are being paid to officers and others or that the corporation has been in financial difficulties.

The answer admitted that its funded indebtedness is unlimited as to debenture bonds, but admits that its outstanding debenture bonds may be increased from time to time under the terms and conditions expressed and set forth in the trust indenture. It also admitted that there was outstanding as of August 29 last an optional 6 per cent convertible debenture series due in 1939 in the sum of $41,000,000, less those held in the treasury, amounting to $2,022,500, but the corporation alleges that the debentures then outstanding have been now reduced by retirement and cancellation to the sum of $38,000,000 and that additional bonds in the sum of $192,500 are now held in the defendants' treasury.

The corporation denies that the compilation of quick assets and quick liabilities set forth in the bill of complaint is correct. The bill gives the quick assets for 1931 as $25,781,209 and quick liabilities as $18,125,787, giving a ratio of 1.21 to 1. The answer gives the current and working assets for 1931 the same as set forth in the bill, but gives the current liabilities as $13,945,407, or a ratio of 1.85 to 1.

Louis A. Fink, financial authority, writing in the Wall Street Journal this week, said that prospects of the Warner companies are good, predicting that operations in the second quarter, which has just begun, would result in a profit.

Franklin Resigns As Circuit Chief

Harold B. Franklin has announced on the Coast his resignation as president and general manager of Hughes-Franklin Theatres of Hollywood.

Franklin is moving his headquarters to the Paramount theatre in Los Angeles, where he will carry on the management of the Paramount and United Artists theatres.

Harold Franklin abandoned plans for nine automat theatres and 40 others contemplated when he resigned as president of Hughes-Franklin Theatres, it is understood in San Diego. The miniature theatres were to have required no ushers, patrons finding their own seats.

NOVEMBER'S BOX OFFICE CHAMPIONS

Three ties in the ratings attest the close competition of productions outstanding in the language of the box office for the calendar month of November, in MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S presentation of the CHAMPIONS. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Possessed" and "The Sin of Madelon Claudet" tied for first position. Then came Paramount's "Touchdown," followed by a tie for next rating between RKO Radio's "Are These Our Children?" and First National's "Five Star Final." Two pictures also shared sixth place, Fox's "Ambassador Bill" and MGM's "The Cuban Love Song." Thus MGM rated three of the leaders.

CELLER ASKS BARRING OF BLOCK SALES

Sales Chiefs Belittle Block Booking Bill

Abolition of block booking, blind buying and arbitrary allocation of pictures is sought in a bill introduced at Washington by Congressman Emanuel Celler of New York. Salesmen said they doubted the bill's advantages to exhibitors would compensate for the rental increases that would follow.

Following is the text of the Celler bill:

A bill to prevent obstruction and burdens upon interstate trade and commerce in copyrighted motion-picture films, and to prevent the restraint upon the free competition in the production, distribution, and exhibition of copyrighted motion-picture films, and to prevent the further monopolization of the business of producing, distributing, and exhibiting copyrighted motion pictures by prohibiting blind booking and block booking of copyrighted motion-picture films and by prohibiting the arbitrary allocation of such films by distributors to theatres in which they or other distributors have an interest, direct or indirect, and by prohibiting the arbitrary refusal to book or sell such films to exhibitors in which they have no such interest.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) for the purpose of this Act "motion-picture film" or "film" or "films" shall mean copyrighted motion-picture film such as is commonly transported in interstate commerce for exhibition in motion-picture theatres. The word "person" shall be construed to import the plural or singular and shall include individuals, associations, partnerships, corporations, and trusts. The word "producer" shall include any person engaged in photographing scenes, plays, entertainments, events or scenes of news interest or historical or educational value, and the like, on negative motion-picture film, for the purpose of making positive prints therefrom or otherwise for exhibition in motion-picture theatres, whether or not such person also is engaged, directly or indirectly, in the distribution or exhibition of such films. The term "distributor" shall include any person engaged in selling, leasing, or renting copyrighted motion-picture film to exhibitors, whether or not such person also is engaged, directly or indirectly, in the production of such films. The term "exhibitor" shall include any person owning or operating a motion-picture theatre or theatres, or other place where motion pictures are regularly exhibited as all or part of a program of entertainment, whether or not such person also is engaged, directly or indirectly, in the production or distribution of films. The "booking" of a film is the making of a contract of lease, license, or sale between a distributor and an exhibitor, whereby the latter is given the right to make public exhibitions thereof. The words "interstate commerce" shall be construed to mean commerce between any State, Territory, or possession, or the District of Columbia, and any place outside thereof; or between points within the same state, territory, or possession, or the District of Columbia, but through any place outside thereof, or within any territory, or possession, or the District of Columbia.

(b) For the purpose of this Act (but not in any wise limiting the foregoing definition of interstate commerce) a transaction in respect of any copyrighted motion-picture film shall be considered to be in interstate commerce if the film is a copy or reproduction of a negative or positive film and is part of that current of commerce usual in the motion-picture industry whereby films are sent from one state to another with the expectation that they will circulate in two or more states, being leased first to one exhibitor and then to another until the film has been exhibited such number of times that the public demand for exhibitions thereof has been met, including in addition to cases within the above general description all cases where films are shipped by distributors located outside a state into that state to any branch or agency owned or controlled by such distributor. Films normally in such current of commerce shall not be considered out of such commerce through resort being had to any means or device intended to remove transactions in respect thereto from the provisions of this act. For the purpose of this paragraph the word "State" includes territory, the District of Columbia, possession of the United States, and foreign nation.

Sec. 2. In the course and conduct of the motion-picture industry the producers own and / or operate studios in the States of California, New York, New Jersey, and other states where they make or produce motion-picture films. In the production of motion-picture films large quantities of unexposed negative and positive films are shipped from other states to the studios. At the studios and on suitable sites called "locations" scenes are photographed upon reels of negative film, and the negative film is developed and edited, and at least one positive film is made. The negative film is then shipped from the studios to laboratories located sometimes in the same states and sometimes in a different state, where as many positive prints are made as may be necessary to meet the demand for the films. The positive films being then covered by copyright are distributed by distributors to exhibitors in the several states. When the films are projected by an exhibitor upon a screen the final stage of the photographic process takes place and there is then depicted what is commonly known as motion pictures. To facilitate the delivery of motion-picture films to the exhibitors most distributors have established branch offices throughout the United States known as exchanges, where negotiations for the booking of films are conducted with exhibitors. From these exchanges, located in the principal cities in the various sales districts throughout the United States, service is given to smaller cities and towns in contiguous territory, the films in passing between the exchange and the exhibitor frequently crossing state lines.

Sec. 3. A continuous supply of attractive motion-picture subjects is essential to the successful conduct of a film exchange or motion-picture theatre. Certain producers and distributors who by means of direct ownership or through total or partial stock control, leases, operating agreements, or otherwise are also exhibitors enjoy a controlling advantage over distributors and exhibitors who are not so affiliated. Such controlling advantage is theirs by virtue of controlling the production as well as the distribution and exhibition of films. Their control of production and distribution has resulted in conditions that have made it necessary for many exhibitors to affiliate with the producers and distributors in order to obtain an adequate supply of suitable motion-picture subjects, such affiliations being established by means of giving to a producer or distributor control of such exhibitor's theatre or theatres through total or partial stock control, leases, operating agreements, or otherwise, or by former exhibitors acquiring a substantial interest or control in a producer or distributor. As a result of this condition, theatres controlled by or affiliated with one distributor are in many cases operated by another distributor. There is an increasing number of cases of control of a theatre or group of theatres by two or more distributors. Such common, interlocking interest and control by one distributor in the theatres of another distributor results in restricting the supply of suitable copyrighted motion-picture films obtainable by exhibitors who are not so affiliated with a producer or distributor. The continually increasing control of motion-picture theatres by producers and distributors results in restricting the number of motion-picture theatres in which may be exhibited the film productions of producers and distributors not affiliated with motion-picture theatres.

Certain practices have grown up in the distribution of films the continuance of which tends to increase the restrictions above described and threatens to create a monopoly in the business of producing, distributing and exhibiting copyrighted motion pictures. These practices consist of (a) blind booking and block booking, (b) unfair discrimination in the allocation of product in favor of exhibitors affiliated with producers and distributors and to the prejudice of exhibitors not so affiliated.

Blind booking and block booking is the system of booking films whereby the exhibitor is denied the right to view the product he is to lease and to select such part thereof as he deems suitable to the tastes of his public, but is required to lease all of the product of a given distributor offered for release during a given period long in advance of the time when the product is to be delivered and often before the making of such product has been commenced. This system of "blind booking" and "block booking" makes it incumbent upon an exhibitor to lease films which are not suitable for his needs and which he does not want in order to obtain films which from the descriptive matter he concludes his patrons will demand and which he must have in the successful conduct of his business. This system of blind and block booking of films requires the exhibitor to show films of poor quality or to suffer the loss of the rental on such films and precludes the small producer having only a few films a year or any other producer or distributor having no theatre affiliations from competing with the producers and distributors because the latter by block booking successfully monopolize the playing dates of the exhibitors.

This practice of blind and block booking is frequently waived for the benefit of theatres affiliated with producers and distributors.

By the practice of arbitrary allocation of product theatres affiliated with producers and distributors are arbitrarily given the choice of product without affording the unaffiliated exhibitor competing with such controlled or affiliated theatre the opportunity to bid or compete for such choice product.

Sec. 4. Six months after the date of this act it shall be unlawful for any producer or distributor of copyrighted motion-picture films in the current of interstate commerce to lease or offer for lease for exhibition in any theatre or theatres copyrighted motion-picture films in a block or group of two or more films at a designated lump-sum price for the entire block or group only and to require the exhibitor to lease all such films or permit him to lease none; or to lease or offer for lease for exhibition such motion-picture films in a block or group of two or more at a designated lump-sum price for the entire block or group and at separate and several prices for separate and several films, or for a number or numbers thereof less than the total number, which total or lump-sum price and separate and several prices shall bear to each other such relation as to operate as an

LANKFORD WANTS FEDERAL CONTROL

Lankford Urges Control of Films

The Congressional Committee on Expenditures in Executive Departments has under consideration a bill introduced this week in the House by Representative Lankford (Ga.), which seeks creation of a new Department of General Welfare, with an annual appropriation of $1,000,000,000, to control radio and films for the benefit of schools, churches, farm organizations, fraternal, veterans' and other associations.

Following is the text of the Lankford bill:

A bill to create a Department of General Welfare, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, that there is established at the seat of government an executive department, to be known as the Department of General Welfare, to aid, encourage, and promote the public schools, churches, lodges, labor federations, farm organizations, organizations of war veterans and descendants of veterans, patriotic clubs, community gatherings, and other legal assemblies and organizations, so that all the people of the several states and territories and of the District of Columbia shall have larger educational, religious, fraternal, social, and recreational advantages, in order to secure a better mental, physical, spiritual, moral, and patriotic development of the people and in order that the general welfare may be provided and promoted, but without impairment of or the infringement upon the laws, the rights, duties, authority, or responsibilities of the several States, Territories, and the citizens thereof, with respect not only to the public agencies and institutions herein mentioned and referred to but likewise as to all private institutions, agencies of said character in the several States and Territories, and leaving to all the people the fullest and most complete religious liberty, unrestricted right of free speech, and most perfect freedom of conscience in the exercise of all constitutional rights.

(b) The Department of General Welfare shall be under the control and direction of a Secretary of Welfare to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Secretary of Welfare shall receive a salary at the rate of $15,000 per annum. Section 158 of the Revised Statutes is amended to include the Department of General Welfare, and the provisions of Title IV of the Revised Statutes as now or hereafter amended shall be applicable to this department. The Secretary of Welfare shall cause a seal of office to be made for the Department of General Welfare of such device as the President shall approve, and judicial notice thereof shall be taken.

Sec. 2. There shall be in the Department of General Welfare an Assistant Secretary of Welfare to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and to receive a salary of $7,500 per annum. The Assistant Secretary shall perform such duties as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Welfare and required by law. There shall be a solicitor, a chief clerk, a disbursing clerk, and such other scientific, technical, and clerical assistants as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act and as may be provided for by Congress from time to time.

Sec. 3. Congress shall from time to time provide suitable quarters for the Department of General Welfare, and the Secretary of Welfare shall have charge, in the buildings and premises occupied by or assigned to the Department of Welfare, of the library, furniture, fixtures, records, and other property pertaining to the department or hereafter acquired for its use in its business.

Sec. 4. That in furtherance of the purposes herein set forth the Secretary of Welfare (hereinafter called the Secretary) shall immediately secure (a) any and all legal right or rights that may not now be owned by the United States Government to the fullest and most complete control of the sending and receiving of all radio communications within the United States, full authority to manage and control said radio communications being hereby vested in said Secretary, subject only to the exceptions hereinafter set forth; (b) sufficient motion picture films of such a nature and standard as to encourage and promote the policy and purpose of this Act to the end that all the people may be made stronger educationally, spiritually, morally, physically, and financially, enjoying wholesome, healthy, patriotic, instructive, and proper entertainment, becoming more sensible of the rights of each other and strengthened in their faith in constituted authority and their Government; and (c) such books, prints, maps, bulletins, other printed and written matter, and such equipment, apparatus, and paraphernalia as may be necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this Act.

Sec. 5. The Secretary shall make provision for supplying the executive, the legislative, and judicial branches of the Government such radio and film service as may be needed by them in the discharge of the duties and powers vested in them by law and shall maintain for the Government and its branches the use of all radio communications and proper film or motion picture service for the purposes of this Act and for the whole people.

Sec. 6. The Department of Public Welfare shall make available to and furnish whenever requested such motion picture films and apparatus and such radio service as may be desired and approved by any and all schools, colleges, universities, churches, missions, lodges, clubs, unions, federations, public hospitals, orphans' homes, charitable organizations, community centers, patriotic organizations, and other organized gatherings in the United States: Provided, however, that no such film, motion picture service, or radio service shall be inimical or antagonistic to the United States Government or the general welfare of the people thereof. The expense of producing and furnishing said films, motion picture apparatus, and radio service shall be without cost to the people of the United States as patrons or users, and no admission charge shall be made when same are exhibited or used. Nothing herein shall interfere with the usual tuition, dues, or collections that may be charged or voluntarily given in such churches, schools, lodges, or other gatherings.

Sec. 7. That a State, county, city, or community may become an organization entitled to all the privileges and benefits of this Act upon (a) electing or providing officials authorized to manage the entertainment and service herein provided and authorized to approve and select the class of moving pictures and radio service to be used and exhibited, and (b) providing suitable buildings or outdoor space with ample seating facilities for such exhibition and entertainment.

Sec. 8. That the department shall pay one-half the cost of school books, maps, and other equipment in all States which provide for the payment by the States of the other half of the cost of said maps, books, and equipment, the State authorities in all cases to select and approve the books, maps, and equipment to be used in such State.

Sec. 9. The Secretary shall confer and cooperate with the different departments of Government, the various State authorities, and any and all organizations mentioned herein as beneficiaries of said service, with a view and for the purpose of ascertaining what pictures and radio service will be requested and how best to fully carry out the purposes of this Act.

Sec. 10. That in the event it is impossible to supply all the service, that may be demanded hereunder, then the service shall be apportioned among the groups or organizations requesting same in accordance with the respective memberships or patrons thereof.

Sec. 11. That commercial advertising shall neither be permitted over the radio within the United States nor by motion pictures authorized or shown under the provisions of this Act. Commercial communications or messages shall not be transmitted over the radio except upon approval of the Department of General Welfare and in such a way as not to interfere with the uses to which the radio service is herein dedicated.

Sec. 12. Political organizations or parties are entitled to the service herein set forth. Candidates shall have the privilege of presenting their cause to the electorate fairly and as may appear just to the Secretary after giving due consideration to class of office to which the candidate aspires, and the number of people to be reached and the availability of the radio service without undue conflict with other purposes of the service herein provided.

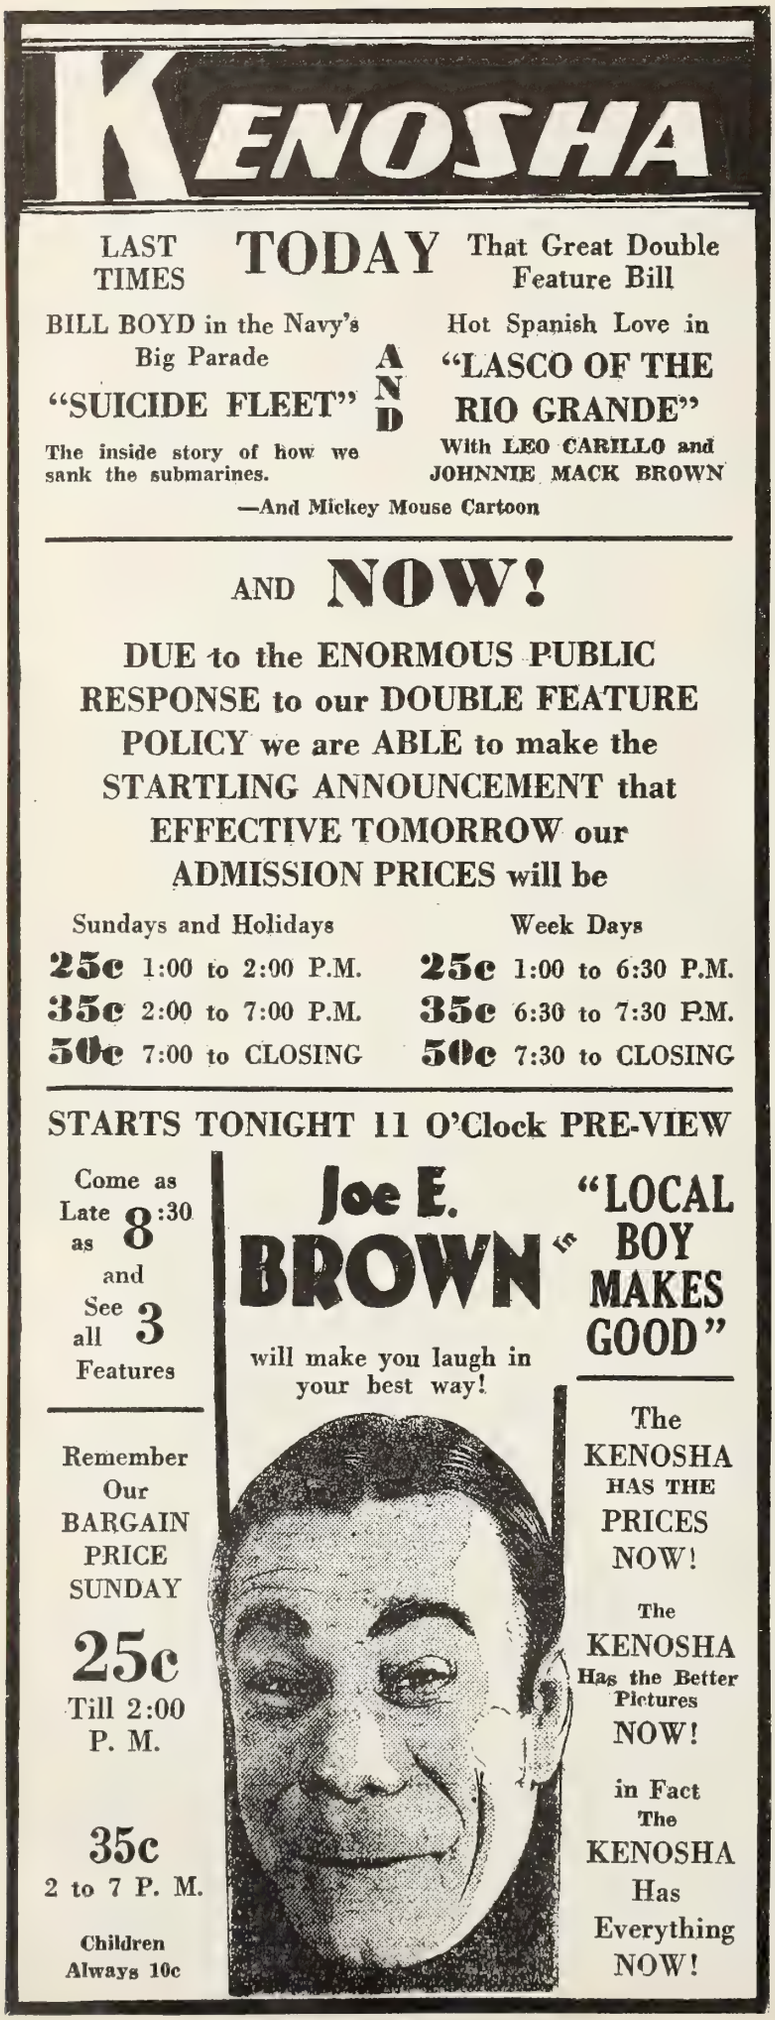
Sec. 13. That in case full service cannot be given to all activities herein mentioned, then preference shall be given to activities of the Government and its various services, to the schools of the country, and the proper entertainment of children and their parents.

Sec. 14. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1931, and annually thereafter the sum of $1,000,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Department of General Welfare for the purpose of carrying into effect and operation the provisions of this Act.



Sec. 15. The Secretary of Welfare shall annually, at the close of each fiscal year, make a report in writing to Congress, giving an account of all money received and disbursed by the Department of General Welfare and describing the work done by the department. He shall also from time to time make such special investigations and reports as may be required of him by the President or by either House of Congress or as he himself may deem necessary and urgent.

Sec. 16. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Finances of Pittaluga Remain Unchanged, Says U. S. Unit

Pittaluga, important Italian motion picture corporation, is not in dire financial straits, as had been previously reported, nor has the situation been changed with regards the supporting tieup with the Italian Government, according to Transcontinental Pictures, agents in the United States for Pittaluga.

Support of the Italian Government revolves around a special financial reward for the best films produced by Cines-Pittaluga, which sum is obtained from the regular governmental admission tax on theatres.

"You may think you know all there is to know about double features and such practices, but I am enclosing herewith what I honestly believe to be the ultimate of something or other," writes Fred S. Meyer, president of the MPTO of Wisconsin, in submitting a clipping of this newspaper ad of the Kenosha theatre at Kenosha, Wis., to Charles E. Lewis, editor of Managers' Round Table of the HERALD.

"At least in twenty-two years in this business I have never seen its equal. Aside from the fact that this is as poor an ad as I ever hope to see, I want you to particularly note that you can 'come as late as 8:30 p.m. and see all three features — "Suicide Fleet," "Local Boy Makes Good," and "Lasca of the Rio Grande.'"

"I thought that I had seen the ultimate when I read your comment on 'Street Scene' and 'Spirit of Notre Dame' on one bill. This same theatre last week ran "I Like Your Nerve," "Resurrection" and "Frankenstein."

"Rumor has it that the next move will be to show the double feature program on Friday and Saturday, plus a previewing of Sunday's two features, which would make four (4) feature pictures on Saturday night.

"And they call ours 'the amusement business.' Well, it is amusing—but 'the Greeks had a a different word for it.'" to lease such an entire block or group or forego the lease of any portion or portions thereof, or shall bear such relation to each other that the effect of such proposed contract for the lease of such films may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any part of the certain line of commerce among the several states, to wit, the business of the production, distribution, and exhibition of motion-picture films.

Celler Proposes Block Sales Ban

Sec. 5. After eighteen months from the date of this act it shall be unlawful for any producer or distributor of motion-picture films, in the current of interstate commerce, to make or enter into any contract, agreement, or arrangement for the leasing of any film or films for exhibition to the public, unless such copyrighted film or films have been completed and are available for immediate release and without first affording the exhibitor desiring to lease such film or films an opportunity to view a projection of such film or films upon a screen if he so desires.

Sec. 6. After six months from the date of this act it shall be unlawful for any producer or distributor to allocate, lease, or rent copyrighted films to theatres which are affiliated directly or indirectly with such producer or distributor or with any other producer or distributor without affording all competing exhibitors an equal opportunity to bid for such films in free and open competition.

Sec. 7. Administration of this act is vested in the Federal Trade Commission, which is hereby authorized and empowered to make suitable rules and regulations for giving effect to the provisions hereof, including the power, after full hearing, to fix the differentials which may be observed between the price of a block or group of films and the price of a separate and several film or films less than such block or group as mentioned in section 4 of this act.

Sec. 8. Any person who shall knowingly and willfully violate any provision of this act or any order, rule, or regulation made by the Federal Trade Commission, shall, upon conviction in any district court of the United States, be sentenced to a fine of not more than $10,000 and not less than $1,000, or to imprisonment for not more than one year or to both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

United Artists to Appeal Test Case

United Artists has decided to appeal its test case against John Pillar, Valley City, N. D., exhibitor, to determine whether or not film contracts which have been generally in use in the territory will have any legal standing in court.

The test case is also meant to indicate whether or not further action should be taken by United Artists and Minneapolis distributors to attempt to enforce alleged contract violations.

Louisville Showman Named To Head Crusading Association

Colonel Fred Levy, of Louisville, for many years associated with First National and a group of houses in Kentucky and Indiana, has been named chairman of a newly organized property owners' association, which purposes to aid in the reduction of taxes and elimination of political wastage.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

Box office receipts for the current calendar week, ended December 12, indicate a drop from the previous week's total. The figure for the current seven-day period reached $2,379,781 for 179 theatres in 30 cities, while last week the total gross was $2,550,524 for 186 theatres in 30 cities, a decrease of $170,743. The apparent loss will be attributed to the smaller number of houses included in the compilation this week. Four new high individual figures and four new lows were recorded during the current week, as compared with five new highs and three new lows for the previous period. It is interesting to note that the new highs, in Chicago, New York, Philadelphia and San Francisco, were grossed with the Universal film, "Frankenstein."

NOW'S THE TIME

HOW LONG is it since you've had one of those real, Honest-To-God comedy WOWS — the kind that drags 'em in and makes you wish your theatre had rubber walls? . . . Too long, sez you? . . . Right! sez we . . . And we've done something about it! . . . We've produced the picture that packs enough laugh dynamite to blast your grosses sky high! . . . What's more, we offer it to you NOW—TODAY — at a time when laughs mean dollars to a greater degree than ever before in the history of the theatre!

With Cora Sue Collins, Dorothy Christy, Allison Skipworth, Claude Allister.
Story by Dale Van Every.
Directed by Thornton U. Freeland.
Produced by Carl Laemmle, Jr.
Associate Producer, Stanley Bergerman.
Presented by Carl Laemmle.

A SHOWMAN'S SPECIAL THAT YOU

That box-office title of Tiffany Pictures' sizzling newspaper drama gives you a flying start; the theme and story are made to order for tie-ups and ballyhoo. Get the ball rolling, and the public will chime in. The New York campaign had 'em guessing, gossiping, gathering around the lobby and getting on the ticket lines. "X" has a hundred money-getting angles for you.

X MARKS

Shipwreck Kelly camps on a short pole atop an auto ballyhoo that marks the spot where the crowds gaze.

Pressbook cover a flash throwaway. Organize a battery of newsboys and bombard the town with the crowd-attracting herald, the four-page press book cover specially made for that purpose.

PASSING IN REVIEW

The department endeavors to set forth two lines of material of service to the exhibitor—first a showman's evaluations of the oustanding pictures—second, reviews of information

"THE STRUGGLE"

In respect to the many fine and solid contributions of David Wark Griffith to the screen, MOTION PICTURE HERALD refrains from critical discussion of Mr. Griffith's latest picture, "The Struggle," which was presented at the Rivoli Theatre, New York City, December 10.

"GOOD SPORT" features Linda Watkins, but it's the other gals in the picture who romp home with most of the honors, and that helps make the picture good entertainment.

Here is what could easily be called a mediocre story made good by reason of a splendid cast giving a par excellence account of themselves. I fully expected to be bored to death with another story about the trusting wife who found out that model hubby was a two-timer, and instead I spent a most enjoyable time sitting through a picture which held the interest right through to the end.

The title can't mean much to the box office unless you create a thought behind that title to make them feel that you have something really worthwhile to offer. Its relation to the story is minor and therefore must get its support from the merchandising slants injected into the theatre's campaign. But if you succeed in creating that necessary interest you'll have no trouble standing in the lobby after the show and smiling a good-night to the customers as they start their trek homeward. They'll return the smile and tell you they've had a nice time. Especially the ladies.

Besides Miss Watkins, you have Minna Gombell, Greta Nissen, in a small, but well-acted role; Allan Dinehart, John Boles and Hedda Hopper. They all give fine performances.

Plenty of "audience" pull for this one. It undoubtedly will leave a pleasant impression on the womenfolk while the men get a grand kick out of it. So don't be afraid to tell your patrons that this picture will amuse and entertain them by reason of telling an old story in a new and mighty interesting manner.

N. G. for the kids or Sunday Showings. But anywhere else it's OK.

"FLYING HIGH" suffered in its transformation from the stage to the screen and as a result is not the picture we expected it to be.

In the first place, too much "smut" is depended upon for laughs, and while it gets the laughs it is all too apt to leave a bad taste in the mouths of the audience. Smaller towns and cities particularly will find this so. A dirty gag is never emphasized as much on the stage as on the screen. The screen brings everything into so close a touch with the audience. Therefore, what I considered just mild in the stage show sounded pretty raw, to me, on the screen.

Bert Lahr and Charlotte Greenwood form a knockout comedy team for any theatre. Their antics drew plenty of laughs at the Broadway showing in New York and even that's an achievement these days.

Several ensemble numbers by principals and chorus put this one in the "musical" class, but you need not feature that slant at all in your advertising if you feel that your audience would shy away from the socalled musicals. You have enough funny angles to work on without resorting to either the songs or the dirt.

The title can be built to mean something at the box office, but it will be showmanship and salesmanship that will do it. The names mean little or nothing, since Charlotte Greenwood is the only familiar name that could possibly get a second look on the marquee sign. Bert Lahr is good only in those bigger cities where he has appeared in musical comedy or vaudeville. Pat O'Brien's "Front Page" role might make him worth a plug, but to me his acting is flat. Kathryn Crawford is about the same.

The redeeming feature to this picture is its passable entertainment value. It has that, providing the aforementioned dirty cracks won't hurt it for your house. So dope out the best lines of merchandising and give it a big send-off, especially along the plane and comedy angles. If you succeed in getting them into the house they'll not complain.

Keep this one away from Sundays or days when the youngsters form lines at the b.o. The "smut" makes that more or less imperative in the smaller towns and cities.

"X MARKS THE SPOT" is much more a newspaper yarn than a murder mystery. It is a real entertaining picture that can rank as about the best in its class since "The Front Page."

The title is charged with box office pull galore. Newspaper tieups, novel exploitation gags around that name, front displays, yes, the whole bag of tricks can be used on this one and they'll get you real results too.

Names? Not so good. Unless a Lew Cody or a Sally Blaine gets customers into your house. So you've got to sell that title above everything else. Just get behind that title and let the receipts speak for themselves.

The story is about newspaper columnists and scoops; a reporter who becomes involved in a murder; a gangster who lends the reporter money for an operation on his sister's legs which have been smashed in an auto accident.

In "audience" value, the picture will get by OK. The story is rather choppy and at times acted a little amateurishly, but just the same the cash customers will sort of like this kind of entertainment and outside the key cities will consider it well above some of the product which has come through with much brass band but not enough entertainment.

Tiffany may not have a world-beater in "X Marks the Spot," but they have kept their eyes on the box office window from all indications.

I'd suggest keeping it away from the kid days. They'll not understand most of the gags and the murder mystery is not keen enough to intrigue them. Best spotted somewhere in the middle of the week according to your playing arrangement.

"THE CHEAT." If the producers would lay off using too many "cawnts" or "Datails," and stick to plain "can'ts" and "deetails," more pictures would sound like the truth and less like fairytales.

In this Paramount release they give you all sorts of fawncy words and stretch-the-imagination scenes, but the chief offense is the performance of Tallulah Bankhead, especially in the courtroom scene where she had a grand chance to prove herself a real actress. But she was far from convincing.

The title can be played around with, but we don't recommend too much plugging for fear of audience reaction when they find that you are not giving them as much as they expected. The wife is not really a cheat so you can't sell that idea. She just gambled some dough that didn't belong to her and then borrowed some from the "willain" who demanded his pound of flesh (?). What followed may suit your audience's tastes; we don't know.

Not much entertainment value and weak in names as well as title, you are going to find it tough selling especially if you are reluctant about making a noise over something that doesn't deserve it. So, "soft pedal" your adjectives, get a peek at it before you sell it and you're apt to hit on the slant best suited to your locality. A Laurel and Hardy comedy would make it easier to sell in your newspaper ads.

No good for the kids and only good for the middle of the week. Won't please them for Sundays, either.

Ladies of the Jury

(Radio)

Novel in treatment and quite different from the usual run of feature comedies. "Ladies of the Jury" is packed with a lot of good, clean fun that was thoroughly enjoyed by the preview audience at the Boulevard. While it features Edna May Oliver, who shot high across the movie horizon in "Cimarron," it carries a formidable cast of other funsters who aided and abetted associate producer Douglas MacLean and director Lowell Sherman hilariously. It should be equally entertaining for those who have never done jury duty, as those who have, for it deals in a semi-farcical manner with the goings on which occur after the jury retires for deliberation.

Opening with a lot of rapid-fire courtroom fun at a murder trial, it winds up when Miss Oliver, burlesquing the big society dame, succeeds in winning a jury 11 to 1 against her to an unanimous verdict for acquital of the handsome young lady accused of that most excusable of modern crimes, killing a husband! In the courtroom sequence, Jill Esmond plays a comely defendant, with young Morgan Galloway as her defender and Allan Roscoe as the bold, harsh prosecutor. Robert McWade does a much more tolerant "judge" than the real law ever would allow. A very polished young chap of the Clive Brook model does a satisfying heavy, Leyland Hodgson. Tom Francis adds plenty of laughs as the jury room officer, and Helen Millarde and Susan Fleming are attractive witnesses.

And the jury! Such a jury! Edna May Oliver, Ken Murray, Roscoe Ates, Kitty Kelly, Lita Chevret, George Andre Beranger, Guinn Williams, George Humbert, Kate Price, Charles Dow Clark, Florence Lake and Cora Witherspoon, troupers all, who know their comedy and never miss a chance to draw laughs during the jury room proceedings. Plenty of gags well put over all the way.

The whole production staff, listed below, is entitled to a bow on this one. It is substantial entertainment. And a cheer may be added by the fact that the money seems to be spent on a strong cast and good story and less on trick photography and fancy backgrounds. Not that

Men of Chance

(Radio)

Melodrama

A snappy melodrama of the race tracks and the men, women and horses which make them dramatic, is "Men of Chance," George Archainbaud's latest work for Radio, done from an original story by Louis (Five Star) Weitzenkorn, adapted by Wallace Smith and Louis Stevens. Those who enjoy horse racing, and that includes most people, will probably like "Men of Chance." It has a good cast, an excellent variety of backgrounds, some thrilling race stuff and a human, believable story.

Starting off in Paris, it introduces Ricardo Cortez as a sort of modernized Diamond Jim Brady, and as one of America's leading followers of the ponies. How a bogus countess, played by Mary Astor, is passed off upon him, how she almost loses his fortune for him by unwittingly giving out private tips, and how she finally saves the day and wins the old derby, is all told in a thoroughly entertaining way.

Besides Cortez and Mary Astor, excellent contributions are made by John Halliday, a very smooth, polished actor who should be seen oftener; by that old stalwart, Ralph Ince, who smokes a cigar better than Barney Oldfield ever chewed one; by Kitty Kelly, swell as the wise-crackin' Broadway "gal"; George Davis, James Donlin, Andre Cheron, Albert Petit and Jean de Briac.

Direction, settings and story treatment are thoroughly adequate. "Men of Chance" is what it sets out to be, an unpretentiously good entainment competently done.

Produced and distributed by RKO Radio. Directed by George Archainbaud. Supervised by Pandro Berman. Original story by Louis Weitzenkorn. Adaptation by Wallace Smith and Louis Stevens. Explorers of the World

(Raspin Productions)

Exploration Film

Six of the world's most noted explorers, members of the Explorers Club of New York, take the audience with them for short synopsis-like trips, via the camera and screen, on their recent expeditions of scientific and educational import, in this, the first offering of the newly-organized Raspin Productions, Inc., which enters the production lists as producer and distributor of authentic exploration features.

A rather distinguished audience at the Criterion in New York applauded at the conclusion and as each of the six divisions of the film came to a close.

Comment was favorable toward the manner of presentation and the incorporation into one feature of the exploits of a number of noted figures who have covered the remote and several corners of the globe. Harold Noice acts as master of ceremonies at a cinematic banquet table, and introduces the various expedition leaders, who in turn, first point out their territory on the map and then deliver, off screen, the lecture which accompanies the pictorial record of their travels.

In order appear Harold McCracken, whose exploits took him to Siberia and the Alaskan Arctic regions; Gene Lamb, noted authority on Tibet and China, who takes the audience to that remote section; James L. Clark, who calls Africa his stamping ground, and is an official of the American Museum of Natural History; Lieutenant Commander J. R. Stenhouse, who traveled the Antarctic wastes by ship and plane; Lawrence M. Gould, second in command of the Byrd Antarctic Expedition, who merely recites his difficulties in setting food supply depots for Byrd on his famous Polar trip by plane. (The films of that trip are, of course, unavailable); Harold Noice himself, who became friendly with, and studied, the Tariano Indians of Northwestern Brazil, on the headwaters of the Amazon River.

A musical score and sound effects have been added to the original film, which was directed and compiled by Harold Noice. Unusual, at least to this reviewer, were pictures of India's national sport, elephant fighting; air shots, taken by Stenhouse from a plane, of the sub-Arctic's barren wastes; bear catching fish in Alaskan streams. One shot which, obviously for its scenic beauty, drew applause from the audience, was that of a large, full-antlered moose caught in perfect pose on the top of a ridge in the Alaskan forest by McCracken.

Produced and distributed by Raspin Productions, Inc. Directed by Harold Noice. Music by Mussina Wachtel. Synchronizing and sound effects by Atlas Sound Studios. Running time, 82 minutes.

Killing to Live

(Amkino)

Nature's Battle

From the cameras of a shock brigade of cameramen of the Russian company, Soyuzkino, comes a graphic, filmed story of the continuous struggle for food, shelter and life itself, as waged ceaselessly among the lower animals the world over, proving the veracity of Darwin's famous theory of natural development, "The Survival of the Fittest."

The film, which is distributed in the United States by the Amkino Corporation, was produced silent. Appropriate musical score, but no sound effects has been added. Arthur Bryan renders the sketchy accompanying explanation of certain phases of the film story. The author of the effort is noted as V. H. Mikhailov, while Myron Auckland, formerly connected with the Museum of Natural History in New York, prepared the descriptive dialogue.

It is claimed that almost two years was required for the completion of the picture. Readily may this be believed, when there is taken into account the remarkable closeup shots of every possible variety of life, animal, bird, fish and plant, and the unusual pictures of these living things actually engaged in the everlasting struggle, in each case having but one outcome, death for one of the combatants.

Highlighting the film were sequences picturing the animals, of all kinds, fleeing together from the scourge of the forest fire. In a deep pit, standing side by side, are seen a lion and a deer, united in a common dread and desire to escape from that element which neither is able to battle. Another strong sequence pictured probably best typifies the theme of the entire film. A frog is seen devouring a butterfly in a stagnant pond. A moment later a snake steals swiftly upon the frog and the small animal disappears down the length of the snake. A small, fur-bearing animal seizes its opportunity and we see it, again in closeup, as it tears the snake to pieces.

The audience at the New York RKO Cameo was held closely by the rapid and logical continuity of the film. Even plants are pictured in the struggle for existence, as they fight for air and sunlight. The human does not enter into the film, except at the close, when we see man harnessing the elements which are a part of the eternal foe which the animal and plant kingdoms have unendingly to contend with.

Produced by Soyuzkino and distributed by Amkino. Directed by Vladimir Korolevitch. Photographed by Igor Geleyn. Assistant director, K. I. Kunitzkaya. Author, V. H. Mikhailov. Lecture by Myron Auckland. Rendered by Arthur Bryan.

Western

Ken Maynard and his star steed, Tarzan, dominate the theme and action in this picture, a frank Western, and without frills, seen at the Warner theatre on Broadway. The three essentials of this kind of production are evenly proportioned action, hard riding, and pictorial background. There is comedy provided by Irving Bacon and the diminutive Billy Bletcher, as Ramrod and Half-a-rod. And the love interest is taken care of by June Clyde.

Rod, Ramrod and Half-a-rod, tricked by a call for help, return to the realization that their horses have been stolen. Hoofing it into Steep Gulch, they apply for a tribune job as sheriff, not a whit deterred by "the deep damnation of the taking off" of half a dozen predecessors in the office.

Then things begin to happen in earnest. They outwit the gambler boss of the town and his bad man, Mace, played by Charles King. They prevent a robbery at the express office and save the girl's weakling brother, who finds his courage in time to draw the bandits' fire from Rod. And Tarzan, remembering the man who brushed him with his blacksnake whip, forces Mace to plunge backward off the cliff to his doom.

Produced by Phil Goldstone from the story by Earle Snell. Directed by Phil Rosen. Recorded by RCA Photophone. Running time, 66 minutes. Release October 1.

Almost Married

(Fox)

"Almost Married" is the title selected for the film that Fox has built on Andrew Sutor's story, "The Devil's Triangle," but all the shivery, shuddery, chills-an'-fever stuff of the original has been transferred to the talking screen with all the power of dialogue, direction, and photography.

Horror lurks somewhere in every human skull. The writing clan from first to last knows this. The men who make our front pages are not unaware of the principle. From earliest folk-tales to the grisly devices of Monk Lewis, Edgar Allan Poe, and S. S. Van Dine, hearers and readers have been delighted to be shocked and made afraid.

Thus it was with the preview audience that saw "Almost Married" at the Fox Ritz. The struggle of innocence with evil, and the amazing cleverness and apparent triumph of wickedness, to be defeated at the last, held all eyes riveted to the screen. Tensely whispered comment, suppressed screams and nervous laughter told the interest as the plot progressed.

The scenarist, Wallace Smith, has filled the lines with innuendo and suggestion, and yet has kept them from being too revealing, so that the mystery of the outcome is kept always in the air.

The director, William Cameron Menzies, has timed the action with the surprises spaced so that the audience has opportunity to get its breath before the next shock.

Produced and distributed by Fox. From story "The Devil's Triangle," by Andrew Sutor. Screen play by Wallace Smith. Directed by William Cameron Menzies, assisted by Walter Mayo and Horace Hough. Photography by John Mescall. Sound, W. W. Lindsay, Jr. Release date, January 17, 1932.

The Cheat

(Paramount)

Talluiah Bankhead, blonde and attractive, holds the spot in this rather dramatic effort directed by George Abbott, in which the girl, becoming reckless with her desire for extravagant luxury, barters much to cover a gambling debt from her husband. Her source of repayment is Irving Pichel, whose Oriental methods of possession are rather exotically possessive, to say the least. The girl becomes more deeply enmeshed until, driven by desperation, the fabrication collapses. A trial, its climax and the resulting reconciliation conclude the picture.

The story, and the manner in which it was handled and performed, seemed to please an audience at the New York Paramount, since they gave it their close attention throughout, and received the closing of the curtain with a flurry of applause. Comment indicated the work of the leading performers of uniformly good quality, with particular attention being directed toward the portrayals of Miss Bankhead, Pichel and Harvey Stephens as Miss Bankhead's young, conservative and very much in love husband. The balance of the cast, though thought to be quite competent, had merely supporting roles of no particular prominence.

When Miss Bankhead finds herself in debt to the tune of $10,000 for gambling, she conceals the fact from Stephens and attempts to find the money, husband being in rather an embarrassed condition financially. Pichel offers his services, hoping for a return, though hardly in kind.

Holding the receipts of a charity bazaar, sponsored by her society group, she attempts to turn it into a great deal more via the stock market. The inevitable leaves her in debt for $20,000 with only Pichel as the hope. She accepts his offer to make good the charity amount, though we are clearly given to understand that she is driven to it. The deal goes through, and her husband is rich, but it is too late. He settles the gambling debt but she has one to settle with Pichel.

In the struggle which follows her attempt to return his money, she shoots him, after he had branded her with an Oriental symbol. Stephens, coming upon the scene, does the right thing and takes the blame. Pichel lives, and in the court trial which follows, attempts to frame Stephens into a prison sentence. Miss Bank- comes through for the climax in a dramatic sequence, Stephens is dismissed and there the reconciled couple leaves the screen. Settings are the yacht club, Pichel's home and the courtroom, the story in no case wandering far afield.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by George Abbott. Original story by Hector Turnbull. Adapted by Harry Hervey. Release date, November 28, 1931. Running time, 70 minutes.

Ladies of the Big House

(Paramount)

Women in prison! Here they are in tragic piteousness, living their lives inside thick, high walls, some of them bravely, all of them hopefully. For these "Ladies of the Big House" differ from their sisters on the outside who may have no aim in existence. These prison women live to be free again.

Paramount has done a "first-rate job," comment indicated, with this story written by Ernest Booth, himself a denizen of San Quentin. The producer has beckoned to a group of his best people, and they are cast with discretion, from Sylvia Sidney, whose beauty behind bars shines as never before, to the bit played by Theodor von Eltz, at the foot of the screen credit list.

Miss Sidney is seen as a young woman sentenced to life imprisonment for the death of a policeman, slain by a gangster who is in love with her. The star meets her opportunity in the role with sincerity and understanding, it was generally conceded. Gene Raymond, cast as her husband, held the audience with his convincing grasp of the character of a man condemned to die.

Thirteen steps lead upward to a platform. Above that platform hangs a noose. The audience does not see the rope, but it knows the rope is there, just as it knows that presently, when those 13 steps have been mounted, the noose shall be fitted around a man's neck. Thus the screen play uses realism by suggestion and elimination. The thing not seen becomes often, under Marion Gering's direction, vital to the action.

Louis Weitzenkorn wrote the play for the screen from Booth's original. David Abel received much praise for his photography, and similar laurels went to Edward Sullivan for his sound recordings.

"Ladies of the Big House" incidentally, in sending two persons to prison—one for life and one to die—questions the law machine's infallibility by showing that both were innocent.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Marion Gering. Screen play by Louis Weitzenkorn, from play by Ernest Booth. Photography, David Abel. Sound, Edward Sullivan. Release date, December 26, 1931.

A Melon-drama

(Radio)

Great Farce

I confess to being one of those yokels who think that Clark and McCullough are funny, and I have been known to laugh outrageously at some thoroughly hokumish, absolutely outlandish bit of slapstick done by them. Not always in their movie careers have these two been provided with the best possible material. When they get it, they usually deliver.

This is the case with "A Melon-drama" produced for Radio by Louis Brock, and featuring these two comics. It is all very silly, and funny, which I take it was the purpose in making it. Directed by Mark Sanrich, it deals with the adventures of the two boys as private detectives. It is farce according to the good old Sennett recipe.

An Animated Pinnacle

Never in his experience has this reviewer seen a more novel, clever or thoroughly entertaining animated cartoon, than is this Walt Disney Silly Symphony number. An opening night audience at the New York Criterion burst into a storm of applause at its conclusion, and well the most unusual number deserved it. When the fly's sweetheart is enmeshed in the spider's web, the army, on wings, on the backs of horse-flies with pins for lances and with dragon flies acting as bombing planes, sweeps to her assistance. Dozens of tremendously clever new drawings and original ideas are incorporated in this smart animated subject. By all means play it, and the audience will talk about it for a week.

Fine Comedy

It isn't often that a situation comedy made in a two-reel short subject succeeds in being much more than an outlandish hodge-podge. But Louis Brock and his staff turned the trick neatly when they made "Big Dame Hunting," which features Ned Sparks. It is a swell little farce comedy packed with laughs and outright guffaws, and at a preview showing to critics was funny enough to keep them in high glee. Ned Sparks gets his wires crossed between a matrimonial agency and an employment agency in searching for a new cook, with hilarious results. George Marshall directed cleverly and did the story in collaboration with Thomas L. Lennon.

Appreciation

I want to thank Sinclair Lewis for giving me the greatest story I have ever put upon the screen; I want to thank New York for the reception it gave "ARROWSMITH" Monday night at the Gaiety Theatre; I want to thank the press of this city for the acclaim with which it has greeted us.

"ARROWSMITH" has been called by those who have seen it the most powerful and appealing film drama ever made; I am grateful if such is the result that has come from the months of preparation; with the inspiration provided by Mr. Lewis' immortal novel Sidney Howard has fashioned a brilliant adaptation and into its playing Ronald Colman, Helen Hayes and Richard Bennett have put the performances of their careers.

To my production organization in Hollywood I send the message of my gratitude to them and the message that their fine and concientious work has resulted in everything they have dreamed about and hoped for. I am wiring to them some extracts from our press reviews—and I want you to see them, too.

- DAILY NEWS — Irene Thirer —
"The 1931 Film Triumph . . . something even bigger, better and greater than you had expected . . . a full and powerful tale...a truly great achievement. You'll see it again and again and tell your friends. It scores four stars for all concerned . . . "
- AMERICAN — Regina Crewe —
"In every way an admirable effort adding measurably to the prestige of the screen, this production towers a giant among dwarfs . . ."
- JOURNAL — Rose Pelswick —
"One of the most distinguished efforts to come from the Hollywood studios . . . 'ARROWSMITH' is a distinct departure from the general run of presentations...the picture is as powerful as the brilliant novel . . ."
- N. Y. TIMES — Mordaunt Hall —
" 'ARROWSMITH' shines in its characterization and in the sane fashion in which the story has been handled . . . an intelligent, forceful film version of a Nobel Prize novel . . . "
- MIRROR — Bland Johaneson —
"Ronald Colman's performance is the finest he has ever given . . . an unusual film, a credit to its star and to the movies . . . "
- WORLD-TELEGRAM — William Boehnel —
" 'ARROWSMITH' makes a bid as the season's best picture . . . an absorbing drama that not only bursts with life, but is a searching portrayal of character . . . the entire cast is well nigh perfect . . . "

Fine

Intimate views of animal and native life on the African veldt should make this short, a Lyman H. Howe Hodge Podge, sufficiently interesting to have any audience concentrating its full attention on the screen. Some of the shots are not usually seen in this type of film. A fire on the veldt which sweeps all before it, is a real highlight of the number.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Sightseeing in New York

Funny

Nick and Tony, veteran and amusing Italian comedy team, in the first of a series. The two operate "Sightseeing Tours, Inc.," and in a horse-drawn carriage take a pair of school teachers on a tour of New York. Various points of interest in the lower part of town claim their attention, as the two "barkers" carry on a very funny patter in their Italian dialect. An amusing number.—Running time, 17 minutes.

Believe It Or Not

Fine Entertainment

Robert L. Ripley, unusual cartoonist and collector of "oddiana," in the second of his new series of Warner shorts. Unusual things and happenings domestic occupy the footage in this subject, providing unusual interest and excellent entertainment. A man tears a deck of cards into aces; in other words, tearing the cards until only the aces are left. A fine number.—Running time, 8 minutes.

AN OPEN LETTER

MR. J. C. JENKINS
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
SOMEWHERE ENROUTE

My dear "J. C.":

Continued perusal of your weekly letters to the editor of the Motion Picture Herald prompts me to invade what might be termed as your "sacred precincts." You no doubt come across many exhibitors who have RCA Photophone sound reproducing equipment in their theatres. A lot of them are scattered throughout California, Washington and Oregon, and inasmuch as you are making a tour of those states at the present time, I am positive they would welcome a call from you. For instance, there is Vernon E. Ross, manager of the Ross Theatre up in Toledo, Oregon. He has had RCA Photophone equipment in his theatre nearly two years. After two months of operation, Mr. Ross wrote the New York office as follows:

After having used RCA Photophone equipment for about two months, am more than thankful it was my selection.

Then, down in Maywood, California, H. Lewis, manager of the Egyptian Theatre, wrote as follows under date of September 12, 1931:

We have had our all AC operated equipment nearly five months and we wish you to note that we are more than satisfied in every respect.

Mr. Lewis was referring to the Standard Size all AC operated reproducing apparatus which was introduced by RCA Photophone last February. This type was designed for theatres up to 1,200 seating capacity.

The RCA Photophone Special Size all AC operated equipment for theatres up to 500 seats is equally efficient. Several hundred of them have been installed in theatres in all parts of the world. RCA Photophone has more than 3,000 installations in theatres and business during the year now drawing to a close has been the best in the corporation's history.

Yours truly,
G. K. RUDULPH

P.S.—Wherever you see the sign: "SOUND SATISFACTION IN THIS THEATRE" you'll know it's an RCA Photophone house.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Tillamook, Ore.

DEAR HERALD:

Dude Smith operates Dude's Coliseum here in this town. His name is Claude but they call him Dude because that isn't his name. Dude treated us just like we wanted him to. The first thing he said to us was that he wanted the HERALD, and when a man says that it's evidence conclusive that his mind is running in the proper channel. Dude knows everybody and everybody knows Dude; that makes it easy all around. Tillamook is where the famous cheese comes from and when you get Tillamook cheese you know you have got cheese. Tillamook is where the Tillamook salmon come from, and Tillamook salmon is running Salmon, Idaho, a hot race for first place. We dislike to say this because Salmon, Idaho, is where our good friend "Fishy" Phil lives and he may not like it, but, doggone him, he has no business living clear up there in the jungles anyhow. Dude says business is passe (whatever that is), but we can't see how it could be in a town like Tillamook, for she's a right smart looking town and Dude is a whiz bang of a manager.

Seaside, Ore.

This town is three-quarters of a mile long and thirty rods wide. It is built right along the waterfront and it has a population of twelve thousand in the summer and twelve hundred in the winter. It has a big sea wall along the waterfront and on top of it is a promenade where the girls display their hosiery, and where the boys are supposed to wear smoked glasses and the girls hope they don't. It is the Atlantic City of the Pacific Coast and if you want to learn what the latest is in this, that and the other thing, go to Seaside during the summer season.

There is an old guy who operates a theatre, here, that is, he says he is old, 68 to be exact, but we laughed at him and told him he hadn't been weaned yet. His name is Callahan and we suggested that he might be Swedish but he said no, that his father was Norwegian and his mother French and that that combination was responsible for the Irish. If we had had time to spare we could have had a lot of fun with him, we could see that at a glance, but it was getting dark and we wanted to make Astoria.

Astoria, Ore.

Astoria at one time was built on piling but a fire got under those planks some years back and cleaned the town out and taught them that dirt makes a better foundation than water. Astoria has two theatres, the Liberty and Viking. The Liberty is a Fox house operated by Edgar Hart, who is an old-timer in the business and knows his onions when it comes to operating a theatre. We believe we could have gone out with this boy and had a real time if both of us hadn't been so darned old. This boy Hart is a regular fellow, we hope we see him again sometime.

W. B. McDonald operates the Viking at Astoria and the Colonial at Eugene. We had the pleasure of meeting Mr. McDonald at Astoria although he lives at Eugene. He is another member of the old guard who has been through the ups and downs of the business and he says a little depression, such as we have now, only serves to put pep in him and makes him go all the harder. Everybody who feels the same way about it hold up your hands.

Here's another "Believe it or not story," and you can believe it or not and it won't make any difference to Astoria or us. Several years ago the "North Bend," a freight schooner, went ashore in a terrific storm off the mouth of the Columbia river and was carried by the sea up on the beach near Peacock spit and was left high and dry forty rods from the ocean. The ship was given up as a total wreck, since there seemed to be no way to get it back into the water, but this schooner didn't look at it in that way, so it gradually worked itself back through the sand until it reached deep water and floated itself. It was then towed around in the harbor, where it now lies. We saw this schooner tied up to the dock but we didn't see it work its way off the beach, but we know it did because everybody in Astoria says it did, and these Astoria folks are truthful people. They tell you that they catch more salmon at Astoria every year than ever ran up the Salmon river since "Fishy" Phil lived there, and if he doesn't believe this he can come down to Astoria and they will swear to it.

Will Rogers and Floyd Gibbons sailed on the same liner from Seattle for Manchuria to put down the rebellion. Bill goes as an unofficial Ambassador from Hollywood and Floyd goes to talk 'em out of it. If these two boys get tangled up with those Japs or Chinks in a game of Red Dog or Fan Tan they will be in luck if they can get back home with their B. V. D's.

An item in the paper says that the teacher asked Willie to explain how a city purified its water and Willie replied, "They first purify the water and then run it through an aviator."

There now, just lookit what they have gone and done. RCA Photophone has horned in on our page and nearly pushed us out of the book. The next thing we know they will have our picture in the "Wanted" column.

Oh well, if they want to bunch all the best things together on one page let 'em go ahead and do it and see if we care.

LISTEN. There, five minutes ago the sun was shining and now it is pouring down rain again. These Oregon folks have got all het up over irrigation. What they need out here is a dredgeboat and a bullfrog farm.

We don't like to put our personal ad in this colyum, but if any one of you want any pups let us know. Our wife informs us that we've got seven of 'em, all dogs but six, most of 'em just dog.

We've got to stop here or Ernie will continue this on the cover page.

YOUR PUBLIC

by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

THE year 1931 is bowing itself out. It has been a year of extraordinary development for the short feature in motion pictures. Slapstick and the tedious vulgarities of vaudeville have given place to operatic short numbers, magnicently dramatized and synchronized; to detective stories in one and two reels, each a finished product in plot development and suspense; to comedies, with something more of story than the custard-pie varieties. But more than all of these, the travelogue has been the outstanding growth of the year. Famous explorers, lecturers, scientists have been sent by the great companies to the strangest corners of the earth to bring back authentic film records of other lands and other peoples. The result has been an accumulated library of short subject classics which are perhaps one of the screen's most important contributions to international understanding and amity. The following list of travel pictures offers a wide choice to the theatre manager interested in building up his program with important available material.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

CHARLES E. "CHICK" LEWIS
Chairman and Editor

An International Association of Showmen Meeting in MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Every Week—for Mutual Benefit and Progress

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

HOLIDAY THOUGHTS!

HERE we are but a few days away from Christmas and our thoughts are supposed to be of "Peace On Earth, Good Will to Men."

"Peace on earth. . . ." Well, it's a happy thought, but it will take lots of optimism for some of the boys to smile when they hear that familiar, "Merry Christmas," this year. But smile you must, for you'll get nowhere at all if you walk around with the mask of despair hung on your face.

No matter how pessimistic your trend of thought may be, you must admit that the worse is about over and from this time on things ought to take on a decidedly better appearance. Particularly is this true of conditions in the amusement business. It was only natural that our industry should suffer along with everything else, but we're an industry of fighters as well as showmen and it is not surprising that we are staging a better come-back than some of the other industries.

Bachelor managers will have to be particularly careful after the first of January . . . it's the start of Leap Year and according to Hoyle and custom, the gals will be out to grab off the husbands as fast as they can. . . .

Maybe it would do the bachelors a lot of good if they did assume the responsibility of a missus and. . . . It's a responsibility that compels one to think carefully and act with less haste or temper. . . . And besides it teaches a great lesson in thrift . . . a lesson, apparently, which is sorely needed by many showmen who still kid themselves along by believing that the future will always take care of them. . . . They should know some of the down-and-out managers we've met this last year or two. . . .

Just to prove that some theatre owners are considerate of their manager's welfare, we would love to mention names and tell about the T. O. who, hearing that one of his managers was about to be married, gave him a week's salary for a wedding present and then fired him before he left for his honeymoon.

Rarely do we get the opportunity of boasting about the selling qualities of home office newspaper ads . . . but this is one time we are tickled to get up and shout our thanks to Milt Silver, Universal's ad chief, for the splendid box-office ads he turned out on "Frankenstein." . . . We are reproducing some of them in the Club section this week. . . . Look them over and see if we were wrong to get so enthused.

The year's biggest laugh . . . "As the new operators of this circuit we want to assure every man that we will make no changes and that all jobs are safe."

The chorus will now sing: "The Farmer Took Another Load Away," or write your own lyrics.

Tsk . . . Tsk . . . Tsk . . . They're at it again. Two most distinguished circuit chiefs have suffered severe cramps and as a result announced that the house manager will be charged with the full responsibility of making his theatre a paying proposition. Unhindered; unhampered; but not un-hooeied.

Surely, by this time, these two executives ought to know that such announcements are carefully read (?), and then consigned to the waste basket. No one believes them anyway.

As we said before . . . Tsk . . . Tsk . . . Tsk!

It's a pleasure to note the fine work being accomplished by many of the theatre publicity men throughout the country, but we do wish they would stop being so modest and take credit for what they are doing. We're not exactly saying that they should shout it from the housetops, but we take extreme exception to someone else grabbing off the bouquets.

We could, if we wanted to, tell about a certain division manager who was nationally patted on the back for a grand hunk of an idea in connection with a certain tough picture to sell. Big ads conveyed the glad tidings to a news-hungry industry that here was a division manager who thought up a most unusual gag and as a result said picture went over big.

The only catch to this little yarn is that the wrong guy grabbed the flowers. From most reliable sources we know different. It was the division publicity man who conceived the whole gag. But, being a modest sort of a cuss he just hung his head, blushed and let the D. M. take all the bows.

I have been informed that it will not be necessary to hang stockings up this Christmas . . . Santy Claus has had his budget cut and the reindeers have been on short rations all year, so they won't be able to pull the sleigh.

Oh well; I haven't a pair of socks without holes anyway, and besides I think I'll take vanilla. . . . Merry Christmas boys and girls. . . .

"CHICK."

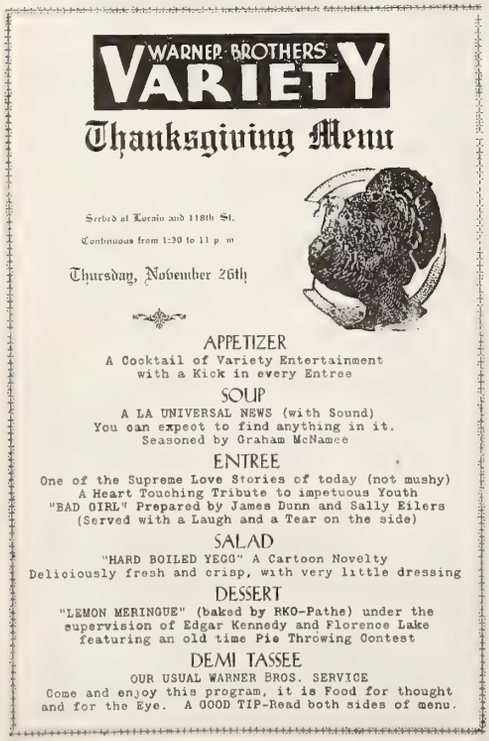
JULIUS LAMM MADE TRADE LIVELY WITH HOLIDAY ACTIVITIES

Both Hallowe'en and Thanksgiving figured conspicuously in promotion of attendance at the Variety Theatre, a Warner house in Cleveland, Ohio, managed by Julius Lamm, and according to report old man depression took it on the chin for the count when box-office receipts were tabulated.

One of the accompanying photos tells a portion of the story of the advertising of this successful party and you will note that the foyer display carried plenty of atmosphere for the event, with Jack-o-lanterns and black cats galore hanging along the walls.

Probably the feature of this Friday night show was a Kiddie Dance Revue in which 21 children took part. This was sponsored by a local dancing school and the number was greeted enthusiastically by the capacity crowd of adults and children.

Other stunts that made the evening most agreeable for the youngsters and furnished plenty of amusement for the oldsters consisted of a number of old fashioned Hallowe'en gags. First, eight kiddies participated in a milk drinking race from as many nipple-attached bottles. The first kid to empty the bottle was declared the winner. The second was an apple affair, with eight more youngsters trying to take a bite from apples suspended from a baton on the stage. Their arms were tied behind their backs and the first one to get a bite from the apple was the winner. The third affair was a balloon blowing contest and the fourth a pie-eating stunt.



The above all took place on a Friday and on the following Saturday afternoon the kiddies all came in costume to the theatre and received the awards. They were judged by the audience, according to applause.

The other photo and line cut shows a couple of Thanksgiving stunts employed by Lamm. The merchandise display in the lobby was arranged through a tie-up made with a local chain store company. It is novel in the respect that this is the first time any theatre manager was able to connect with this outfit and in return for the display the theatre received twelve turkeys for giveaways. Four were given at a time, on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday prior to the holiday.

The Thanksgiving Menu Program you see reproduced here is a copy of those handed out by a young lady who was attired in a costume furnished by the chain store company and stationed by the display. From soup to nuts the menu described the program and furnished a nifty little novelty.

Although too late for use on these particular holidays we're passing these two ideas along right now for members to either file away or use for Xmas or New Year, for which they can easily be adapted. Xmas dinners are also in much evidence on that day and as you all know, costume parties fit particularly well on New Year's Eve. Thanks to Julius Lamm, who always manages to send along some corking slants on show business from time to time, and here's hoping that he will keep up the excellent work he's doing at the Variety.

MAMMOTH MERCHANT TIE-UP ENGINEERED BY MANAGER BRODIE

Fifty leading merchants of his city recently participated in what was termed a Fall Harvest Celebration by E. Brodie, manager of the Paramount Theatre in Haverhill, Mass. Each merchant donated gifts for the event and carried large banners in their windows to announce the attraction.

On the first two days of the celebration, a ballyhoo consisting of a large hay-rake was drawn through the streets by a horse. The vehicle was preceded by a band, with members dressed as "rubes." On the side of the rake was a banner advertising the current attractions at the theatre. In addition to a four-page co-op. in the Sunday issue of the leading newspaper, 110,000 slips were printed in connection with the 40 giveaways. In order to participate, all receiving the slips in the store, purchase or not, were instructed to write their names and addresses on them and drop them in a box provided for the purpose. The slips were taken to the Chamber of Commerce at noon on a Monday and brought to the theatre for the night performance. The Mayor, who owns and operates the opposition theatre, was on hand to officiate at the ceremonies.

About 15,000 copies of the four-page co-op. in flyer form were mailed out to the outlying towns and the Chamber of Commerce advertised the event in 11 suburban papers, each ad giving mention to the current attraction. The whole show proved so mutually beneficial that the merchants are dickering with Brodie for a return show on a still larger scale next year.

TOM WALL PROMOTED TWO BANDS TO SELL PICTURE IN BOSTON

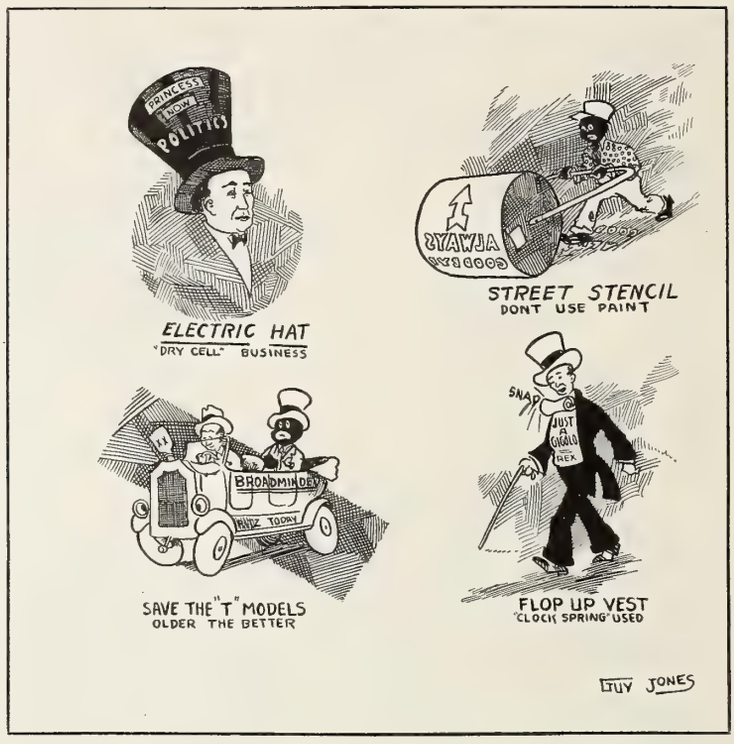
Two prominent bands helped to exploit "Mad Parade" when this picture played the Modern Theatre, a house in Boston, Mass., managed by Thomas F. Wall. In fact, the stunt was classified as a "nifty" over in this territory since this parade was the first of its kind ever to be held in the city of Boston.

The musical organizations included the Bessie Edwards Cadets, national champion drill team of the American Legion Auxiliary and also the full band of the House of the Angel Guardian from a neighboring town. This band had 65 pieces in line.

Wall had arranged for the necessary permits governing street parades and this assured the parade of excellent police co-operation. The parade created a tremendous amount of attention and interest along the line of march.

Three of the ushers, attired in their uniforms, carried a large (20-foot by 4-foot) banner; copy describing the idea of the parade.

After the bands had filed into the theatre at the conclusion of the parade, Wall made a short address from the stage regarding current and forthcoming pictures and then asked the band to play a number. The boys came through with "Over There" and this was followed by the picture, "The Mad Parade."



The nature of this picture might demand something like a 65-piece band to ballyhoo it and we must certainly give Wall due credit for the initiative he displayed in promoting a stunt of this sort. How a band of this size can publicize a picture, we don't have to tell anybody.

Keeping Up With The Times!

By GUY JONES

Here is a group of different stunts that may appeal to your style of show-selling. Guy Jones is always trying to make his cartoons both interesting as well as useful. He's really "keeping up to the times" with his many fine contributions to the Club pages.

LARRY WOODIN STILL ON JOB SELLING HIS SHOWS IN WELLSBORO

Only a short time ago we went into considerable detail to tell you the story of how Larry Woodin, manager of the Arcadia Theatre in Wellsboro, Pa., made his complimentary tickets practically do the work of two-for-ones by paying especial attention to how these were placed and since this information has been broadcast, it is our hope that the avalanche of letters requesting information from Larry has ceased.

Just to let you know that he does other things besides ride around his zone and hobnob with advertisers, let us state that when he played "Politics" there was a hot political campaign on in his town and election but two weeks off. Did he take advantage of the situation? We'll say he did! In his local newspaper there appeared an ad under ("Politics" Advertisement) classification which appealed in matter-of-fact manner to voters to give their support to certain candidates. At the close of the ad it was disclosed that Polly Moran and Marie Dressler were the two politicians. After the ad appeared a herald reprint was made and given wide distribution.

Again somewhat of an opportunist, he played up the names of Margaret Williamson (Margaret Adams) and Harry Davenport in a local appeal ad on Tallulah Bankhead's "My Sin." These two happened to be natives of nearby communities and the move was nicely supported by the newspaper.

Woodin was one of several Round Tablers to take advantage of a local political campaign when putting over "Politics" and his ad had all appearances of being a regular political plug until the last paragraph was reached. His quick action upon discovering that two local celebrities were included in the cast of a picture about to be played brings to mind our many warnings not to overlook the possibilities of this angle.

RUSS STEWART OVER IN NEW ENGLAND ON REVUE SHOW MISSION

Lest a number of readers have lost track of one Russell Stewart, alternately newspaperman and P. A. and more recently on some rag, let us hasten to inform those interested that he is once again back in show business and this time teamed up with revue producer Victor Hyde, promoting local shows on the Fox-New England circuit.

Two weeks ago this duo tied up with a newspaper in Bridgeport, Conn., spotted the show in Ted Holt's Majestic and, according to report, doubled the average gross for the week. Stand up business at practically every performance caught the attention of Herschel Stuart and it was decided to work the racket in other towns along the line; hence, we find the enterprising Russ at the present writing engaged in the fine art of separating a Waterbury paper from a whale of a lot of space to publicize another revue. According to advance information, the stunt is clicking just as nicely in this town as it did in Bridgeport and it looks as though Russ will have a Xmas stocking this season. Plenty of front page stuff and other stories offer evidence that this newspaperman-showman knows his way 'round.

Good work and good luck, Russ, and keep in touch with your old Club while in the East or elsewhere. Shoot along some dope on anything that comes up that you think will be of interest to others and we'll see that it gets the proper treatment.

"ALL FOR ONE AND ONE FOR ALL"

FRED JOHNSON SOLD ON BOOSTING FILMS WITH PERSONALITIES

Scratching around for ways and means to boost attendance, Fred E. Johnson, manager of the Latonia Theatre, Oil City, Pa., has found that stage attractions, such as radio favorites, etc., have proved to be veritable life-savers when used in conjunction with certain feature attractions.

To support his claim, we direct your gaze to the accompanying photo which shows a large crowd storming the entrance to witness the performance of two radio artists, when all single day attendance records for this house were shattered into bits. Approximately 6,400 persons jammed their way inside the house during the five performances and standing room was at a premium. The droves that were turned away from the gate will have another chance when the team plays a return engagement in January. He is following this booking up with others of well known radio personalities and expects to make just as good a clean-up.

In line with relief work sponsored by many theatres this season. Johnson recently arranged with the Red Cross for the staging of a "Pound Matinee," when boys and girls were allowed admission to the show by bringing along a pound of some edible article of staple food. More than 1,000 youngsters helped pile up a wide assortment of food for Red Cross distribution to the poor.

Two other stunts being worked at the Latonia these days include the teaching of harmonica lessons and the holding of Country Store Night once a week. Both old gags but ones that this theatre is cashing in on. Regarding the harmonica lessons, Johnson has a teacher who is giving lessons after school to children of certain age and the stunt is going over in a big way. After a four weeks' course, the scholars vie for honors at the theatre and of course that gets the parents to the house. The Country Store stunt is tied up with the neighborhood business men's association and doesn't cost the house a cent. Fred says it may not be so dignified but adds, "to hell with dignity in these anything but palmy days."

Good work Fred, old Round Tabler, and let us state right here that we're mighty glad to have you again represented in this department. We can also appreciate what ends you are going to in order to bolster up the weak ones. However, if you're doing this without too much damage to overhead, we say go to it and more power to you. Your other suggestions will also be appreciated by your fellow showmen. Keep up the good work and let us hear from you just as often as possible. Now that the Holiday Season is here you will surely have a lot of interesting stunts to pass along.

CHARLEY RYAN WON HIGH HONOR AMONG WARNER DIST. MGRS.

There cheers for Charlie Ryan! Warner district manager and distinguished member of the Round Table Club. We are most proud to record that his name appears in a recent issue of "Carry On," Warner house organ, wherein is listed the three leading district managers who won serious money in a drive made over a period of 21 weeks. Charlie is jotted down as number three and the recipient of a tidy sum of coin of the realm.

Charlie Ryan

The above is unquestionably a signal honor, sought for by many and won by few. There were 45 districts represented in the drive and a like number of contestants, all of whom stepped on the gas to have their houses make a favorable showing. Ryan has three theatres under his supervision in Chicago, the Buckingham, Julian, Symphony and Orpheum. So we say again—give him, and the boys who helped him attain this honor, a big hand. And let's all wish him a lot more success of the same kind in future days to come.

COX STAGED FASHION SHOW TO DETERMINE TOWN'S BEST SHAPES

A somewhat different angle was given a Fashion Show when Albert G. Cox, manager of the Irving Theatre in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., decided to stage one in an endeavor to locate the most attractive feminine figures in his town. He did this with the co-operation of several merchants and one of the newspapers in a rousing campaign that brought applications from over 400 girls, out of which 40 were selected and trained for the occasion by the assistant manager. The best of the aggregation were chosen by the audience on the night of the show.

The apparel shop that supplied the gowns also furnished a fur coat give-away for the occasion and had two coats on display in the lobby one week in advance as a stimulant for this feature of the show. The give-away was handled in the usual fashion. In addition, the merchants in the show ran large ads in the three daily papers and had their windows trimmed and especially decorated with appropriate posters to ballyhoo the event.

The show was staged as a feature rivaling a smart, fast, peppy musical revue. Special stage talent was on hand as well as a band of eighteen pieces, in a most attractive fashion promenade setting. The merchants were so pleased with the performance that they immediately set machinery in motion for another in the near future.

Rather a daring move, Al, to seek to determine the best feminine figures in town, but an interesting stunt at that. Were you the judge? However, joking aside, Cox is just another Round Tabler to take advantage of what is looked upon as one of the most effective interest-getters in show-business and we're passing the word along as a reminder to those who may have neglected the promotion of their Fashion Show.

ED FORRESTER USED APRIL FOOLS STUNT TO GOOD ADVANTAGE

As an exploitation for "Get Rich Quick Wallingford," Eddie Forrester, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Grand Island, pulled an April Fool trick out of the bag and used it to good advantage.

Forrester purchased twenty 10c bill folds and in each inclosed a note reading:

"Too bad! Three city slickers already beat you to it and fleeced the owner of this purse out of everything he had, including the gold in his teeth. They are in 'Get Rich Quick Wallingford,' at the Capitol Theatre, Nov. 8, 9 and 10."

P. S.—Be a sport and put the note back in the purse, and drop it in some conspicuous place so that someone else can have some fun with it."

These 20 billfolds were lost about town. It was a great come-on gag and well suited to the theme of the motion picture advertised. A crackerjack for April Fool's Day or any other time, and thanks to Forrester for passing it along.

OPPOSITION OF FAIR MEANT NOTHING MUCH TO SAMUEL FRIEDMAN

Samuel Friedman, manager of the Publix-Capitol Theatre in Pottsville, Pa., is an optimistic sort of a fellow, and one with a lot of grit and determination. When the odds were against him—Fair Week—he chose this particular week to celebrate his twenty-fifth anniversary in the show business. He got the backing of one of the local newspapers and conducted the celebration under "New Fall Season of Greater Entertainment."

Through the co-operation of the paper, Friedman was able to get various musical organizations for appearance on the stage and also the securing of numerous give-aways from merchants.

In addition to the above co-operative acts, the newspaper gave front-page readers every day during the campaign and also gave over 1,000 inches of ad space to boost the celebration.

The celebration was brought to a close on the Monday night after the previous week's celebration by the giving away of a new Plymouth sedan which was promoted from an automobile agency. Business on this night broke all existing house records for an evening attendance. There were enough turned away to nearly fill the house again.

Friedman certainly went after the opposition with a vengeance, but it's quite evident that his efforts bore fruit when the amount of business done is taken into consideration. It's been a few weeks since this member has been represented in this department and we're mighty glad to see him back again. Tell the Club more about what's going on in your town, Sam.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Thor Hauschild began his career in show-business at the age of 14 years when he ushered one night a week in a stock theatre in Davenport, Iowa. The business fascinated him from the very start and he followed the various phases of theatre routine until he won his present position as manager of the Paramount Theatre in Steubenville, Ohio.

Thor Hauschild

He was born in Spokane, Wash., in 1906, later moving to Davenport, where he was educated in the public schools of that city. Leading up to graduation, he spent his spare time as usher in an RKO house and as relief doorman in a Publix theatre. After graduation he acted as doorman in a small Publix second-run house and was later given a similar job in a first-run. He later managed the Garden Theatre in Davenport and after leaving show-business for about one year came back to it as assistant manager of the Colfax Theatre in South Bend. He worked in this capacity for a little over a year and was then promoted to his present position.

During his career in this field he has been associated with independent stock, the A. H. Blank Theatre Circuit, Publix and RKO. He expects to follow his present line indefinitely.

DUKE HICKEY GIVES US A LINE ON WHAT L. CARKEY IS DOING

After kicking about the West Indies for a matter of four months, Duke Hickey, exploiteer extraordinary, is again back in this country and his first official act was to pay a visit to the city of Elmira, N. Y., a town noted for its famous reformatory. Here, but not in the reformatory, he discovered one Larry Carkey, an old friend of Duke's and one-time active member of this Club. Impressed with Mr. Carkey's efforts in behalf of the box office at the Strand Theatre when exploiting "The Spirit of Notre Dame." Hickey has forwarded an account of the campaign which we will report as accurately as possible, not forgetting that the latter else lent a hand.

Bakers and Football

What bakers have to do with football we don't know, but it is a fact that a tie-up was made with a large local bakery whereby 15,000 special package inserts were sent out with the bread, all imprinted at the baker's expense. The baker further expressed his gratitude for being permitted to distribute free crullers and coffee from a mezzanine pastry exhibit by donating 2,000 gift novelties to children patrons of the theatre.

D. A. R. Helped

Classifying the Daughters of the American Revolution as enthusiastic exponents of the manly game of football, this organization's president was sold the idea of making an announcement of the picture to all Parent-Teacher groups, and to all grade and high school students, through teachers. The local Federation of Women's Clubs also lent a hand and much, in fact, gobs of word-of-mouth advertising were obtained through this move.

Two other tie-ups that helped accelerate the "Spirit" were made with the McFadden Book and restaurants. In the former, all local news-stands and book and magazine stores, about 100 in all, were included in the deal on the McFadden-Rockne Book. As to the restaurants, eight of the leaders in the city carried special underline publicity copy on picture on menus during engagement.

Effective Distribution

Other advance publicity consisted of a special midnight preview, so popular that a second one had to be given the following night; the special distribution of accessory heralds from Chamber of Commerce, Kiwanis, Rotary and other civic clubs (all left over were distributed by the A & P in packages); the handing out of 5,000 special announcements at theatre, and the mailing of 1,000 special cards to prominent people.

Among the window displays secured was a 30-foot one on a principal street, where all manner of accessories, streamers, stills, one and three sheets combined to make up a window that attracted thousands. A loudspeaker, attached to top of door, played the Victory March and broadcast a Rockne Talk. Another tie-up was made with a music company located next door to the theatre for the broadcasting of the march through special wiring to marquee of theatre.

You will note that the campaign is still in healthy condition and among other gags used to pep up Elmyrians were included a tie-up with Tavannes Watch for a complete window which contained stills, etc.; announcement of picture at all dance academies, and a tie-up with the Elmira High School football team, whereby members accompanied by band paraded to the theatre as guests for an early performance.

Typical of Carkey

From what we know of Carkey the foregoing is typical of the excellent work he is capable of turning out. Ever since we first knew him as the manager of the Strand Theatre in Carthage, N. Y., where winters are almost as long as they are in the Arctic regions, he has been going after business. In those days he used to invade Watertown territory with 24 sheets and demonstrated that patrons could be brought from larger towns to smaller ones. It's a pleasure to again include his name among these pages and we hope that he will not neglect future opportunities to let the rest of the fellows in this game know what he's doing. Good luck also to Duke Hickey, to whom we are indebted for sending in this dope.

POSTER ART!

Drawn By BENTON L. JAMES
(St. Joseph, Mo.)

We hope the new style set-up of the Club pages, and the resultant reduction in the size of these fine poster reproductions, won't hurt the efficiency of them to the many managers and artists now using them as often as they appear. If such is the case, please drop us a line and we'll have to work out some sort of an arrangement that will permit the larger size again.

While this poster deals with the picture "Tabu," it can be used for most any other picture where such an illustration can be worked in. So don't discard it because you've already played "Tabu" or won't have it at all. This makes a particularly effective poster and with the proper selection of colors will be a most outstanding piece of art work for any theatre.

Other artists who were kind enough to contribute to this series must keep in mind that indistinct snap shots will not make up clear enough for reproduction.

BRYAN MAKING GOOD AT CHICAGO HOUSE; IS BOOSTING TRADE

Not long ago we told you all that Round Tabler Bunny Bryan, formerly of New Jersey territory, had been transferred to Chicago. At that time it was a bit too early to definitely state his new headquarters, but at this writing we have a line on him at the Belmont Theatre, a fine, big, B & K 3,600 seater, located in a thickly populated German and Swedish neighborhood.

After taking charge of the house, one of the first things Bryan did to step up attendance was to hold "Country Store" on a Tuesday of his second week in command. He tied in with the largest department store in the section for the give-aways of a radio; an electric grandfather's clock; an electric percolator set; several blankets; a set of dishes; a carving set; two hams, and 10 bags of groceries. He acted as M. C., himself, and the net result of this effort was to inflate the old cash register to the tune of several hundred excess dollars and the means of bringing many new faces to the Belmont.

Country Store continued so successfully that "Furniture Store" was inaugurated for Friday nights. For this event, he promoted for give-aways a seven-piece dining room set, a Cogswell chair, dishes and a lot of smaller articles. Not only was the Friday gross doubled as the result of this venture, but it gave the house the largest gross it had garnered in almost a year's time.

Another move, made in the face of stiff opposition from the smaller houses in the neighborhood, was to give patrons a bargain price on Sundays until 2 P. M. This resulted in a jump of the usual attendance of from two to three hundred to the recently recorded number of 2,113, an advance certainly worth mentioning.

Back here at headquarters, we're mighty glad to know that Bunny is getting away to such a good start with a stubborn proposition and we're sure that all his friends in the East and elsewhere will also be glad to hear the news. As customary with this showman, he does not take all credit to himself, but mentions that he has an assistant by the name of Romine who is lending an able hand. So until we hear more concerning the activities of these two enterprising showmen, we wish both the best of luck.

BOUCHER TO WASHINGTON

Owing to a recent change of policy in Warner Theatre divisions, Frank Boucher, well known showman and Round Tabler, has been recalled to Washington where he will act as "doctor of bad situations," a task for which he is particularly well fitted.

MORRIS FOR RE-ASSIGNMENT!

Walter Morris, until recently district manager for the Warner Maryland District, just arrived in New York for a home office conference. He is then scheduled for a new assignment, probably somewhere in the Ohio Zone. Lots o' luck to you, Walt.

TOM WEAR WITH SMALLEY

Tom Wear, Jr., formerly connected with an Elyria, Ohio, managerial post, has hooked up with William Smalley's chain of theatres in upper New York State. He will be on the loop most of the time, looking after advertising and attending to other circuit matters.

MORRIS ROSENTHAL WAGED A SPLENDID CAMPAIGN IN MASS.

When a showman has been used to giving big city treatment to his picture campaigns and suddenly finds himself transferred from a large city to a small one, it is only natural that the small city will find out that there's a new citizen in town. That's what happened up in Holyoke, Mass., when Morris Rosenthal, late sensation of Wilkesbarre, Pa., put over "Spirit of Notre Dame."

Two weeks in advance he contacted the local schools (Holyoke is a college town) and arranged to put on a special night for one of the football teams. Cheer leaders were induced to do their act on the stage and the story was played up on the front page of the school paper. Consent of the school was also obtained for the placing of bulletins on regular boards.

Another stunt resulted from a tie-up made with the Sears-Roebuck branch, whereby some 200 newsboys participated in a parade which wound up in front of the theatre on opening day with an attempt to capture footballs kicked from the roof of the theatre. The company donated the balls and also gave a window for a special display tying up with picture.

Many Tie-ups

Other featuers of the campaign consisted of a book store tie-up on the Rockne books; a window tie with Rockne record dealer; use of empty store window for loaned football equipment; the sending of telegrams to Civic Clubs, timed to reach them at dinner; spotting of cards at Y.M.C.A.; letters to all school principals of grade and high schools; mammoth banner strung across street in front of theatre; the placing of window-cards in downtown stores not in habit of using them; posting of 75 three-sheets and 100 window one-sheets, and some striking cut-out displays in theatre lobby. Newspapers also came through with some fine stories.

All of the above, with excetpion of billing paper and the banner, was promoted at no cost to theatre which, to our way of thinking, proves that Rosenthal hasn't taken very long to adapt himself to a new and vastly different community. Holyoke, not being used to such extensive campaigns, is already awake to the fact that an enterprising showman has arrived and we'll predict that Morris will get all there is to get out of the Victory.

Revives an Old Gag

Oh, yes; before we forget, he revived an old advance gag on "Five Star" that clicked in great shape. Just before the house trailer went on all the lights were stepped up and a gang of newsboys began to yell "Extra! Five Star Final, Extra!" Then, they passed out the dummy newspapers used for this picture. A check-up showed that only a dozen or so were thrown away. The balance were carried out and read. Alright, now that we've got that off our chest we'll sign off until we get a further line on this Round Tabler's activities.

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

Are We Coming To This? Anything Is Possible In These Trying Days!

FLANNAGAN BROUGHT BORNEO ATMOSPHERE TO GREENFIELD, MASS.

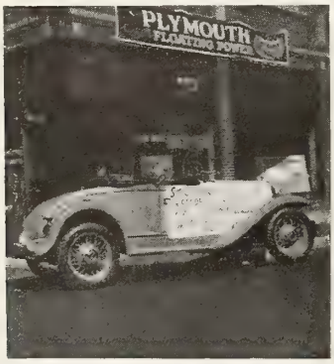
Asiatic island atmosphere was imported for the edification of New Englanders when L. G. Flannagan, manager of the Garden Theatre in Greenfield, Mass., played "East of Borneo." For three days in advance of showing, a display of curios from Borneo were on exhibition in the lobby, including skins, spears, stuffed animals, etc. A special trailer on the screen informed the patrons about the display and urged them to examine this authentic collection brought back while the picture was in the making.

When the picture opened the curio display was used for atmosphere in a jungle-looking lobby. The box office was enclosed with bamboo sticks and the sides contained thick shrubbery such as one would expect to see in a jungle. On the evening before the picture opened, a portion of the Borneo display was transferred to a department store window and remained there until termination of engagement.

An additional novelty consisted of placing a boy in the outer lobby, dressed in white overalls, frock and wearing a jungle hat and carrying in his hands a street sweeper's broom. This also created more atmosphere and the boy further helped by passing out information about the picture.

COLLINS GAVE FILM SPECIAL TREATMENT WITH A MAGNASCOPE

The magnascope screen treatment given "Palmy Days" by E. E. Collins, manager of the Metropolitan Theatre, Houston, Texas, was received so enthusiastically by patrons that the idea was passed along and used by Publix houses in Dallas and San Antonio. Following is a brief description of the manner of presentation:



In the "Bend Down Sister" number song by Charlotte Greenwood, the screen was used with a lavender gelatine tint in a frame in front of the lens, thus tinting the entire screen and giving it added production values. Later in the picture, when Eddie Cantor sang "There's Nothing Too Good for My Baby," the magnascope was again used but in addition to the lavender gelatine, a yellow or straw-colored gelatine was used on the F-7. In other words, the picture was shown on a magnascope size with a purple tint from the machine plus a straw tint from the F-7.

In line with Collins' statement that the use of the above greatly enhanced entertainment values of certain scenes, we are passing the idea along for others to try out and will be interested to learn if this also meets with successful reception in other theatres.

KISLINGBURY MADE ADVANTAGEOUS DEAL WITH MOTOR CAR CO.

In return for the privilege of permitting the display of one of the late models of their line in the lobby, a motor car company put over a large amount of advertising for F. F. Kislingbury, manager of the Paramount Theatre in Plainfield, N. J., consisting of placarded cars and trucks and a number of other worthwhile stunts, which materially aided the gross on the occasion of "Secrets of a Secretary."

In addition to placing banners on all cars in use at that time, the company held a parade of autos, devoted a large window to the tie-up and sent out letters to a selected list of 700 people, announcing the name of the feature picture and the display of the car at the theatre. Seven thousand heralds, recording the tie-up were also distributed by the theatre staff and Kislingbury had a large sized hand in writing the copy. The small photo shows one of the bannered cars.

Other efforts included the driving of a roadster about town by a masked girl; a bally by truck equipped with a loudspeaker; newspaper display advertising; a tie-in of a stage personality, who, drove one of the cars while blindfolded; a special ladies' matinee, and a midnight "Spook Show."

It would appear that Kislingbury traded a small amount of space for a whale of a lot of valuable advertising and so he's offering the suggestion for others to try out with some local auto dealer, providing that they have lobbies large enough to permit a display of this kind.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB
1790 Broadway, New York City

CAST OF STAGE SHOW HELPED MILT KRESS WITH RADIO SKETCH

The cast of a stage show, an added attraction along with the picture "Devotion," helped Milton Kress, manager of the Saenger Theatre in Meridian, Miss., put over his show by donating services gratis for two 45 minute broadcasts over the local radio station. The radio station permitted the broadcasts to go out without any charge for time.

Three of the players also were on hand to entertain those present at a luncheon of the Lion's Club and this further helped publicize the double attraction. Another stunt that gained additional publicity was a street ballyhoo of one clarinet player, followed by several persons carrying banners on picture and added attraction.

We'll have to take off our hat to the players for coming through so nicely to help put the show over and also think it's in order to state that Kress must have used some good salesmanship when he obtained their services. Good luck, Milton, and let your Club know what else is going on down your way.

ALASKA NOT FROZEN LAND, SAYS VETERAN SHOWMAN E. PAULSON

There exists a widespread impression that Alaska is a cold, bleak, frozen land peopled mainly by red-blooded he-men, Esquimaux and huskies, and to disprove this, E. Paulson, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Juneau, sends along a photo of a group of comely girls who helped put over "War Nurse," and in so many words states that all these ideas about his country is just a lot of balloney. On the contrary, he says, he wouldn't trade Alaska for a lot of other places in the States he happens to know about. A little rain, not too much snow in winter and a very pleasant summer all combine to make Juneau a most attractive city in which to live, and Paulson has tried it out for 12 years.

The girls shown in the small photo are the ushers at the Capitol and they used the costumes to plug the picture in advance and during engagement. As a matter of fact, the ushers don't mind a bit giving a helping hand to their manager when the occasion is presented to put over a publicity stunt.

Paulson has been in this game ever since 1907 and one can pick up a lot of interesting information about show-business in that length of time. We are sure that he has a lot of worthwhile tricks of the trade up his sleeve and hope that he will find time to shoot some of them along for the benefit of his fellow showmen, even if it's only to show all of us that he's not snowed in during the winter season.

ANOTHER GROUP AD

For the second of our series of Group Advertising we offer the one used by the Fox Poli Circuit of New England in their Bridgeport, Conn., location.

A quick glance reveals an eye-arresting ad without in any way detracting from the outstanding qualities of the individual attractions. In other words, both the group and the separate theatres benefit by this treatment.

This style is applicable to any group wanting to join their ads together. Cost of space should not discourage you. Merely follow the same style as this one or any previous groups reproduced on these pages, enlarging or abbreviating the make-up according to your budget for such combination advertising. Circuits, especially, find this a better means of selling their attractions than as formerly via separate ads, where one might overshadow the other too much.

KIDDIE ATTENDANCE!

Publicity attending a recent survey of kiddie attendance has disclosed the report that little better than three per cent of the average theatre's revenue is derived from this source. According to zone, these calculations ranged anywhere from three to ten per cent and now a lot of people are asking just why so much stress is placed upon this phase of the box office.

As far as it can be seen, the value of kiddie attendance cannot be measured wholly in box office cash, although even three per cent is not an item to be laughed off these days. Kiddies as we see them, from constant analyzation of exploitation efforts, can be and are a great asset to the theatre manager. The exploitation stunts in which they take part free of cost, the kiddie clubs and resultant word-of mouth advertising, all combine to step up that three per cent, if this amount be the correct estimate of their worth.

BALLYHOO AND TWO TIE-UPS FEATURED BEN COHEN'S WORK

Ballyhoo played an important part in the campaign made on "Monkey Business" by Ben M. Cohen, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Hazleton, Pa., four different stunts being employed to help put this picture over. Two tie-ups, one with a radio dealer and another with a ladies' wear store, also proved excellent box office stimulators.

Regular Carnival

One of the ballys consisted of an old model 1880 fire engine, horse-drawn through the streets with a sign reading, "What, No Fire? Merely A Riot Of Fun With, etc." Another one caught attention with a truck load of empty beer barrels with copy, "Barrels of Laughter, etc." Four boys, dressed as Marx Brothers, also contributed to the general publicity scheme by parading the streets with live monkeys on their shoulders. All carried signs on their backs and one of the boys played an accordion. Another gag that went over well was the dressing of every store in town with words ending in the letter "O," such as Musico, Shoeso, O-O, ho-ho, Hatso, Groucho, etc., permission to do this having been obtained from the Mayor.

Other Tie-ups

Both his tie-ups made with radio and dress stores featured guest tickets an dinvited readers to write captions for the accompanying scene mats. Portions of the ads also tied in with radio models and name of concerns, so we judge that cost of same was covered by the storekeepers.

According to a description we have at hand, the entire business block reflected the spirit of the picture, with practically every store playing up some kind of ad connected with the Four Marx Brothers. As a consequence the box-office did well.

Lest we forget, let us mention that Ben Cohen is quite a singer, for it was not long ago that he created a profound impression among worshippers at a local Temple when he sang the Kol Nidre service. His father, also a cantor, sang the same song at approximately the same time in a New York City Temple. In Ben's case, it was good for a story in the Hazleton paper. Now that you all are aware that he is both showman and singer, we'll sign off until we hear more about what he is pulling off at the Capitol.

DE HAVEN GETTING ACQUAINTED IN THE BOROUGH OF BRONX

Since taking over management of the Burke Theatre, a John C. Bolte house in the Bronx, New York City, A. Milo De Haven has been busy as the proverbial one-armed paper-hanger in the way of getting acquainted around a new neighborhood and lining up publicity plans.

One of the first things he did to liven things up was to hold "Singing School" two nights a week. Bronxites apparently like this sort of thing and the stunt, as De Haven states is giving them a chance to get a lot of stuff out of their systems.

Then he made a tour of the entire neighborhood on a get-acquainted mission and paved the way for future tie-ups and goodwill for his theatre. He has also made a reduction in admission, which is already showing returns, and to gain publicity for this change in policy he arranged for the placing of window cards and distribution of heralds through a tie-up made with a laundry, whereby the latter sent out notices with each package. The small photo shows another angle of his campaign that brought the lobby into use for advertising change of management and a Championship Harmonica Contest.

Naming the champion harmonica player of the Bronx is not an inconsequential matter and quite elaborate plans were drawn up for the event. A number of music teachers in public schools were contacted and sold on the idea of cooperating, six neighborhood music stores have been tied-up for window displays and other advertising and at the present time 37 young residents of the locality have signified their intentions to win one of the handsome medals shown on the display in the accompanying illustration. All in all, it looks like a sure fire hit.

The foregoing, in addition to putting on a campaign for the theatre's unemployment relief show, is a good example of what can occupy a theatre manager's time in the short space of three weeks, or since the time De Haven assumed charge of this house.

CAMPAIGN BOOK FOR "SOOKY"!

Paramount has turned out one of the best showmen aids in their campaign book on "Sooky." In addition to many worthy stories and advance plugs, they offer a wide assortment of exploitation ideas that are really feasible. Which, in itself, is an innovation in campaign books.

So, if you have this one bought, get your press book early and digest its contents thoroughly, you'll find real money-making ideas crammed into its pages.

We only wish we could say as much for lots of other press books being turned out for exhibitors' use.

THEATRE PROGRAMS!

More and more each year showmen are placing great store in their house programs, especially so since the said programs are being read.

What a forward step has been made in the use of theatre programs! The program of today is packed chock-full of interesting news, and comment on pictures. Ads, too, are often run. The make-up of the program is excellent. And the best part of the whole affair is the cost—practically nil—the ads, in some instances, paying for the printing.

In view of the above, is it any wonder that a showman should be proud of the theatre program? We think not. When a well made-up program is usually the basis for a large mailing list, the program must have care taken on it. We'd like to reprint as many programs as we can, as we are sure that showmen all over the country are interested in looking them over. Send them in to Club headquarters.

FOOTBALL GAME WAS USED TO ADVANTAGE BY FLOYD F. SMITH

Day and date opening of a picture and the clash of two well known and powerful football teams was the coincidence nicely taken advantage of by Floyd F. Smith, manager of the Paramount Theatre in Nashville, Tenn. It happened that Vanderbilt and Tulane universities were scheduled to fight it out on the local gridiron so it was announced that Lew Ayres would donate a loving cup to the hero of the day.

Star Donated Cup

The cup was on display in a prominent store window and remained there until it was presented at the Saturday night show. The winner happened to be Pete Gracey, the Commodores' fighting center. They all look alike to Pete, winning or losing, and the Tulane players who were to judge the winner of the cup, apparently appreciated his play, for they gave him a unanimous vote. The Vanderbilt coach made the presentation from the stage.

The night before (Friday) a preview screening was held for coaches, assistants, captains of teams and sports writers. They all acclaimed it as an outstanding football picture. These comments were given full sway in the local papers which also helped to popularize the picture during its showing at the Paramount.

Endorsed by K. of C.

A special letter was also sent to every member of the local Knights of Columbus with a personal endorsement of one of the priests who had seen the picture. This further helped to increase the popularity of the picture.

There have been many opportunities such as the above during this year's football season and this department has made mention of a number of instances whereby Club members have obtained valuable publicity from a stunt of this kind. Smith was on the job and it is to be hoped that other Round Tablers are not losing a chance to have an announcement made between halves to thousands of spectators.

If a football picture, so much the better, but it has come to our notice that any number of managers have been on the job this season with the realization that here is a corking medium to advertise their wares. Let's hear some more from you, Floyd.

THAT "SCOOP" STORY!

Not long ago we received a letter from a newly elected member of this Club in which he stated, "Just as soon as I put over some outstanding and original stunt I will make haste to shoot it along for the benefit of my fellow showmen."

Now this member meant alright but who is going to pass upon the originality of any stunt in this business of selling shows? Don't wait for the "scoop" stunt to come along, for someone has said that there's nothing new under the sun in this line except some novel slant applied by the individual. You can keep up your end in this organization by keeping headquarters posted regularly on everyday business, for this is bound to produce angles of show-selling that will be interesting to others.

HARRIS ENTERTAINED AUDIENCE WHEN THE POWER HOUSE FAILED

Breakdown of a city's source of electric power while a show is in full swing always makes it interesting for a manager and this happened not long ago to H. B. Harris, manager of the Exchange Kinema, Lincoln, England.

On the occasion, all of Lincoln's downtown supply of "juice" was suddenly cut off and the house plunged in utter darkness. Acting quickly, Harris caught up a hand torch, stepped on the stage and entertained the audience with wise-cracks relating to forthcoming attractions during the considerable length of time between lights. The audience entered into the spirit of the occasion and kept quietly to their seats until the show went on again.

He is also making excellent use of two-color one-sheet size posters, printed in red and black. These are generally headed in red, with such captions as "Warning, Election Notice, etc." A recent example of this was made in the case of "Woman Between," when the copy "Election Notice—To All Parties" headed the sheet. All words relating to politics were run off in red, making the poster appear as something sensational in local political activities.

Power lines are always breaking down and Harris' action will serve as reminder to act quickly when such a situation arises, thus forestalling any tendency on the part of an audience to become panicky. He is the Club's representative in his section of the world and we've had occasion before this to tell you all that he's a seasoned showman. We will hope to hear from him again.

MOORE GOES H-F

Lafayette Moore, well known member of this Club and former theatre manager in Lynchburg, Va., has lined up a job for himself as manager of the Paramount Theatre, a Hughes-Franklin house in Los Angeles, Calif.

HOLLANDER PROMOTED

Elmer Hollander, former manager of the Warner-Stanley Theatre at West Chester, Pa., has been transferred to Chester, Pa., where he will have charge of the three Warner houses. He succeeds Jack Frere, who is convalescing from a serious illness.

Al Schwartz, formerly of Reading, Pa., will take over Hollander's old post at West Chester, with H. Y. Rogers acting as assistant.

BEN COHN AND JOHN PIVAL SPLURGE WHEN SELLING ANNIVERSARY

When an Anniversary Week is staged by General Manager Ben Cohn and Publicity Manager John Pival, of the Senate Theatre Company in Detroit, Mich., these two showmen tell their public about the event in a big way. The reproduced ad on this page is one of several used to broadcast the news through the medium of a community paper that has the healthy circulation of about 25,000. This layout, as well as several other attractive ones, represent the result of time spent by Ben, Johnnie and the editor of the paper in an effort to produce something that would pack a wallop.

The other side of the full page referred to in the above paragraph also carried another page announcement of the Senate Anniversary, setting forth a brief history of the house, facts and policy. A number of stunts were run in connection with the event, such as free dancing in the lobby; an amateur show, country store night, and dresser-ware night. The newspaper tied up with the guest ticket gag of printing each day the names of citizens living in the theatre zone. It also gave the Anniversary story a front-page break; in fact, several other tear sheets testify that the Senate is receiving a very nice break all the way 'round from the paper, due no doubt to Pival's tactfulness in dealing with the management.

Another opportunity to get in a good plug for coming attractions is in a column conducted by John, called "Coming and Going." This occupies space in the upper left-hand column of the front page and consists of breezy notes on neighborhood personalities, with here and there a mention of what to see in the way of entertainment.

We're glad to hear from the Senate crowd again and hope that Johnnie Pival will continue the good work of keeping his brother showmen informed. We noted that one of the film company house organs picked up and passed along that stunt Ben Cohn pulled some time ago, when they went out and taxied customers to the theatre during a rainy matinee. That was a nifty, alright. Send your Club some more, J. P.

SERVICE STAFF COURTESY!

Courtesy is one of the prime essentials in show selling. The showman who can boast of a service staff that is drilled in courtesy to the topmost degree, has certainly a powerful asset for making the patrons return. Ushers should be impressed with the necessity for smiling, and the smiles shouldn't be of the forced variety. We might, in order to strongly stress this point, contradict ourselves to the extent of declaring that it is not necessary to have a Cheshire grin for each and every patron. Try to have your ushers observe a gentlemanly standard and you'll find that your house, as far as personnel goes, will be hitting on all cylinders. Ushers of the type sometimes encountered in the de luxe houses of New York and other large cities are a disgrace to the theatre for which they work. These ushers, hard-boiled and possessed with an inflated idea of who and what they are, should be taught that if they can't place consideration for patrons paramount they don't belong in show business. After all, plenty of managers rise from the usher ranks, and it's a sure thing that if very many of these annoying ushers became managers, the show game would soon be a far from desirable business.

DON'T OVERLOOK!

—Relamping those burnt out bulbs on your marquee and signs.
—Fixing those little rips in the carpets.
—Keeping that lobby of yours bright and inviting.
—Pressing the uniforms when necessary.
—Checking up on the heating plant and boiler room.
—Seeing that motors are being lubricated regularly.
—Watching that roof drain pipes are not clogged up.
—Fixing loose or torn seats and standards.
—Cleanliness in the lavatories and rest rooms.
—Making an inspection tour of your billboards.
—Courtesy due your patrons from the staff.
—Write a few yourself.

J. MANNING TIED-UP WITH SPORTS STORE FOR TWO FOOTBALLS

A stunt that received a full share of attention from a football-minded public was recently used by J. E. Manning, manager of the Saenger Theatre in Vicksburg, Miss., when exploiting "Spirit of Notre Dame."

He tied-up with a sporting goods store for the promotion of two $14 footballs and a window display of stills, cards and other advertising matter on the picture. The footballs made up part of the display for several days in advance and on the Saturday morning, previous to picture's opening, the balls were attached to a batch of balloons and released from the top of the theatre building. In addition to interest attached to securing one of the footballs, ten of the balloons carried passes for the show. The newspapers played up the stunt, mentioning name of picture, theatre and playdates.

It's a little late in the season to pass along Manning's suggestion but it is one that worked out well for him and it can be filed away for use next Fall. It was a natural, considering the theme of the picture. In the meantime, we'll await word on what this Club member has been doing to boost holiday trade.

SCHMIDT PROMOTED

Ernie Schmidt, managing director of the Capitol Theatre in Williamsport, Pa., and publicity director for Paramount-Publix theatres in that region, has been promoted to the post of district manager of the entire district, according to a recent announcement by Divisional Director George Walsh, of Scranton.

He will have under his supervision the Publix theatres in Williamsport, Carlisle, Pottsville, Sunbury, Mauch Chunk, Shenandoah, Danville, Bloomsburg, Northumberland and Jersey Shore, one of the largest districts in the circuit.

Schmidt will be succeeded in Williamsport by Harry D. Stearn, a live-wire showman who has been in charge of the American theatre in Pittston, Pa. The Club congratulates both of these members for their well-deserved promotions.

Like the old grey mare the life of a motion picture player ain't what she used to be by any means, judging from the way they go to work when making personal appearances along the line.

For instance, let's take a slant at a recent co-op promoted by George A. Delis, manager of the Capitol Theatre in Steubenville, Ohio. Too bad we cannot reproduce this double truck and show you its extent but this new make-up has got us whip-sawed right at the present time. Anyway, the spread is headed to the effect that Sue Carroll and Nick Stuart, making their personal appearance at the Capitol, would visit the stores listed below. The different articles mentioned in the ads are tied up with the stars' names.

That-a-showman, George! You were using your head weren't you, when you put over the above-mentioned co-op? It was a corker alright and earned your theatre a nice break in the head and center portions of the two pages. Within the next week or so we'll tell you how Delis sold "Side Show" and "Five Star Final." Until then, the usual Club farewell.

GIRTON HAD KIDDIES PLEDGE THEMSELVES AS HALLOWE'EN STUNT

As the result of a theatre party held on a Saturday morning by Warren C. Girton, manager of the Keystone Theatre in Williamsport, Pa., 3,000 youngsters signed a pledge not to play any harmful or destructive pranks on Hallowe'en night.

Inside the theatre, in addition to witnessing a feature picture and a couple of comics, the kids worked off considerable deviltry by indulging in ducking for apples contests, and other gags in keeping with the occasion. Everyone on the theatre's staff donated their services and there were eight policemen on hand to keep order outside the theatre before and after the show.

It's still an old custom, particularly in the smaller towns, for the youngsters to play pranks on Hallowe'en that often arouse the ire of residents. Girton's party forestalled this through his party and pledge card and thereby earned a lot of gratitude and good will for the theatre management. The newspaper did its share to play up the event.

HART STAGED BLOCK DANCE AS PUBLICITY STUNT FOR PICTURE

Continuing a resume of recent campaigns engineered by Ed Hart, manager of the Stanley Theatre in Utica, N. Y., this week we'll tell you what he did to sell "Personal Maid" to his public.

Perhaps a highlight of this campaign was a "block dance" held in front of the theatre on opening night of the picture. All patrons of the theatre were given ribbons entitling them to the privilege and the stunt attracted a large crowd on both sides of the street. Music was furnished by a number of unemployed musicians. Dancing was also permitted in the lobby between the hours of 11 and 12. The photo shows a portion of the dancers gathered in front of the theatre. The papers played up a story, using the angle that the Stanley had furnished work for unemployed musicians.

Special lines were used on bottom of regular theatre ads announcing the dancing feature, in addition to 4 inch ads scattered throughout the papers. The copy was unique and headed, "Dancers Attention." The theatre was decorated with colored lights and palms added to the appearance of the lobby. Lest we forget, it was necessary to secure permission from city officials for staging of the dance stunt.

Other efforts included projection of slides on "Busy Corner" building; use of special cut-out under marquee; special window tie-ups in shops displaying gowns, hats, maid uniforms, etc.; 50 cards in local and suburban windows; banners on three buses in and out of town; three and six-sheets in vacant stores and "busy corner," and a guest ticket gag on correct titles of song numbers broadcast over local radio station, at which time picture was announced.

Through use of the stunt described above and other advertising, Hart succeeded in bringing about a very fair opening for a picture that did not register so well in Utica. It is noticeable that this showman figures out pretty well in advance just what will click and what will not and then acts accordingly—as any good manager would attempt to do. His opening wedge is then based on strength or weakness of the picture. We still have a couple more of Hart's campaigns on hand and will shoot them along just as soon as practical.

A WORTH-WHILE TIP!

Like the postman on his day off who goes out for a walk, and like the sailor on shore leave who goes rowing, the showman, on his day off, can usually be found round a theatre. Many members of the Managers' other showmen, have a friendly chat on the various problems that arise in a showman's experience, and leave with a feeling of having gained something.

It won't hurt any showman to drop in and say a word or two to his fellow worker. And if the showman has a problem relating to business to discuss, he shouldn't be afraid to ask for suggestions. It might so happen, and it generally does, that the man to whom he is talking can generally help him with the problem in some measure, small or large. The showman should never be backward about asking for criticism or comment. After all, we are proud of that "all for one and one for all" spirit.

STERNS MADE DEAL WITH MAGAZINE TO DISTRIBUTE PHOTOS

An arrangement made with one of the popular five cent weekly magazines, whereby 8,000 photographs of Greta Garbo were given away with copies of the periodical, proved to be an excellent plug for "Susan Lenox" when this picture was played by Ben Sterns, manager of the Troy Theatre, Troy, N. Y. Other photos were given away by two prominent stores on opening day of picture.

Other effort included a special advance story in the newspaper on the occasion of a midnight show; a one-sheet on one of the best corners in Troy; a special banner used in United Cigar stores; one sheets in seven stores in small towns within a radius of 20 miles, and other regular run of advertising.

Sterns made out well with the above campaign, particularly the tie-up with "Liberty," hence we are passing it along. We have a hunch that this is the same Ben Sterns that used to manage a Saratoga house, and who never lost an opportunity to drop in the old M. P. News office and say hello when he came to town. How about this, Ben? Are we right? At any rate, let's hear from you.

GREAT ADS TO SELL A GREAT PICTURE!

Here are the ads from Universal's ad shop on that grand S. R. O. picture, "Frankenstein." A glance will reveal why we were so enthused over their self-selling possibilities that we decided to reproduce them in this way. In addition to the ads shown on this page, Universal has assembled many others, all available through your local Exchange and illustrated in the "Frankenstein" press book. Inasmuch as few pictures carry the b. o. possibilities of this one, we would urge every member and reader to back up the showing of this picture with a powerful newspaper campaign, using ads of this kind to accomplish the greatest results.

THE INDUSTRY'S 'IDEA EXCHANGE'!

H. G. MOORE not only manages the Crescent Theatre down in Dade City, but owns it as well, and we're mighty glad to extend the Club welcome to this new member of the Sunny South. We take it that he's found these pages profitable in the past and now proposes to help the good work along by contributing an account of his own activities. Let this come along, Moore, and we'll do the rest.

EDWARD J. FREIWALD is still another owner-manager to join this ever-growing army of theatre managers. He's located down in Nice Ville, Fla., which, to our way of thinking, is a Nice place to be during our local season of rain, sleet and whatever the weather man has to offer. The name of his theatre is the Fry-Wald and we'll soon expect to let you all know what ways and means are used to put this house over the top.

——Wear Your Club Pin! ! !——

W. A. VAN CAMP is in charge of the Uptown Theatre, a Publix house in St. Paul, Minn. He operates on a straight sound picture policy, with three changes weekly, which manages to keep this showman quite busily engaged in the art of selling shows. Now that he has joined our Club, we'll look for some information on how he goes about this sort of thing. Let's hear from you again, Van.

M. WAINSTOCK manages the Egyptian Theatre out in Sioux Falls, S. Dak., and he, too, has been adopted into our tribe. Welcome to this organization, Chief Wainstock, and now that you are a full-fledged Round Tabler, take a few minutes off some night, when a blizzard howls down from the Black Hills, and jot down a story about how you lure the Sioux into your playhouse. We'll be awaiting your next communication.

ALBERT HEFFERMAN is the owner-manager of what is undoubtedly one of the most unique motion picture theatres in these United States, the Owl Theatre in Grand Rapids, Mich. Hefferman and his co-workers, Irving Folger and Donald Blietz, all high school students, some time ago started a show in a neighborhood garage. It grew in popularity until they were forced to install sound equipment. Now the house is playing to about 60 people per performance and the books have never seen the color of red ink. Hefferman is now a Round Tabler and we'll tell you more about this "little theatre" in a future issue.

JIMMIE MASON is at the helm of the Strand Theatre in the city of Minot, S. D., one of the Publix-N. W. houses. Despite the fact that he's just become a member of this great organization of showmen, he has been an ardent follower of this department and a close observer of all exploitation stunts furnished by its members. Now that he is enrolled we may expect to hear how shows are sold out in Minot. What say you, Jimmie? Can we depend on this?

——Wear Your Club Pin! ! !——

P. H. ROSENTHAL is only 23 years old, but his father tells us he's been hanging around the Queen-Strand Theatre in Aliquippa, Pa., ever since he could distinguish the difference between photos of Mary Pickford and Charlie Chaplin. Before he went with his dad steady, he acted as assistant manager at the Ohio Theatre in Ravena, Ohio, but now he's helping sell shows for the family, in the capacity of assistant to H. Rosenthal, who, we venture to state, will some day turn over the helm to P. H. In the meantime, we'll depend upon one of these showmen to keep us informed about what's going on in Aliquippa.

——Wear Your Club Pin! ! !——

C. S. TROYER hails from Bottineau, S. Dak., where he manages the New State Theatre, and we're mighty glad to welcome this new member to this ever-expanding Round Table of showmen. He's our representative out his way now and we'll expect to hear all about what it takes to sell shows to patrons of his house. Shoot along some of your ideas, Troyer, and we'll pass them on to the rest of the gang.

——Wear Your Club Pin! ! !——

JEROME M. LAYTON, assistant manager of the Tuxedo Theatre, Bronx, New York City, knows his onions in the matters of house managing and publicity, according to a statement from his boss, Bert Jackson, and these facts are further attested to by Yale Greenhaus of the Mosholu Theatre on 204th street. He is therefore duly elected a member of this Club and we'll expect to be kept informed on how the good Bronx citizens are coaxed away from radios, slippers and dressing gowns. What say, Jerome?

——Wear Your Club Pin! ! !——

BURGESS WALTMAN, another new member of this organization, is located down in the Blue Grass city of Fulton, Ky., where he has charge of the Warner-Grand Theatre. He's only 22 years old at this writing, but is already a somewhat seasoned showman, having served with both Columbia and Strand Amusement companies of Paducah, prior to taking over his present position. He knows how to put over selling stunts at the cost of $3.50 per and we'll tell you about one in a future issue. In the meantime, we'll await some more show-dope from Waltman.

L. R. TOWNS hails from good old Alabam', where he manages the Academy and Walton Theatres in Selma. It's the same old story with Towns as with others who finally see the light and perform the simple act of sending in an application for membership. He, too, has been digesting and benefiting from many suggestions sent in by this big army of showmen and now proposes to do his bit. That's the dope, Downs, and we'll be mighty glad to hear from you. How's old Selma, anyway? Last time we were near your town we got mixed up with some of that red clay, silipped off the road and thought we'd never get out. Suppose that's all changed these days.

——Wear Your Club Pin! ! !——

BEN GROSS started in show business two and one-half years ago at the Ritz Theatre, in Brooklyn, N. Y., and after being promoted to the post of assistant at the Berkshire Theatre, we find him in the same capacity at the Biltmore, that well-lit-up house out on New Lots Avenue, Brooklyn. He's also a new member of this Club and his boss, Joseph Luntz, states that Gross is a capable artist as well as an assistant. On your toes, Ben, and here's hoping you'll be at the helm of your own house some of these days. In the meantime, see what you can do to get your chief to send in some dope on what's doing out your way.

——Wear Your Club Pin! ! !——

THOMAS F. WHYTE has been proposed for membership in this organization by James Grady, of Loew's New Rochelle Theatre, New Rochelle, N. Y. Whyte is a neighbor of Grady's and is in charge of the New Rochelle Proctor Theatre, an RKO house. He has given an excellent account of himself of himself as resident manager for the past seven months and we believe he will contribute some good dope for these pages. Shoot along some of your ideas, Whyte, so the other fellows will know what you are doing.

——Wear Your Club Pin! ! !——

GEORGE FENNELLY is located in Millinocket, Maine, where he manages the Opera House. He has also been elected a full-fledged member of this outfit and we're glad to pass along the regular welcome to this new Round Tabler. Now that you are in this big army of showmen, George, unbend that writing hand and tell the rest of the gang how show-business is coming along in your town. We'll be awaiting the word.

TED HILGENDORF manager the Ritz Theatre in Milwaukee, Wis., and he's also in line for an introduction to his brother showmen. Sometimes the cart gets ahead of the horse and if you haven't already seen a short story in this department concerning one of Ted's recent stunts, then we're here to tell you that you soon will because we recall setting it up in print. BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 109—(A) Describe a method of testing and sorting needles. (B) How may small diameter needles be quickly sorted out? (C) Tell us exactly what attention you give your needles. Never mind the Bluebook—just tell us what YOU do, why you do it. (D) Supposing the needles to vary in length and diameter, or in either, what will be the effect? (E) What will be the various effects of dust on records?

Answer to Question No. 103

Question No. 103 was: "(A) Describe the RCA exciting lamp. (B) What is the reason for the darkening of the interior of an exciting lamp globe? (C) What is the relative effect of a darkened exciting lamp globe? What should be done with a lamp when its globe has begun to darken? (D) Name the various things affected by a faulty exciting lamp, sagged filament, filament out of square with the slit or darkened globe?

Those answering acceptably are as follows: Lester Borst*, Messrs. S. Evans and C. Rau*, Messrs. Kroll and Van Buskirk*, Herman B. Billings, Roy J. Arntson, N. D. Garling, G. E. Doe, John Wentworth*, Larry Tipton, James DeVoy, Dan L. Simmons, T. Van Vaulkenburg, P. Cermak, John Williams, Nic Granby, P. L. Toeping, Jack Billings, H. D. Schofield, Henry Edwards*, Bill Doe*, H. Davis, Sam and Andrew Wells and P. F. Daniels.

Those followed by an asterisk (*) made exceptionally complete, excellent answers.

I have selected the answer of Messrs. Evans and Rau, though Kroll and Van Buskirk gave them a close run, as also did Borst and Billings. Here is the answer of Messrs. Evans and Rau:

"(A) The RCA exciting lamp is a small incandescent globe having a coiled filament of small diameter held in horizontal position. There are two types of RCA exciting lamp. Both lamps are similar except for the amperage rating. One is of five ampere capacity and the other is a seven and one-half ampere capacity.

"(B) Darkening of the interior of exciting lamp globe is caused by deposit of matter thrown off by the filament.

"(C) The relative effect of a darkened exciting lamp globe is loss of volume and poor quality sound. When the lamp shows signs of its interior darkening the lamp should be removed and a new one installed.

"(D) The exciting lamp filament illuminates a narrow slit. The most powerful illumination emanates from a line representing and, in fact, being the center of the filament. It then follows that the filament must be in a perfectly straight line if the greatest illuminating values are to fall upon the slit throughout its entire length. If this be not the case, then the sound volume will be decreased and its tonal quality injured, which, then, are the results of a sagged filament.

"With RCA equipment the filament cannot get out of square with the slit, but with other equipments this may happen. The result is decreased volume and sound distortion. A dirty or darkened exciting lamp globe will result in decreased light, hence in decreased volume. Tone quality will also suffer. If the dirt be interior deposit, there will be not much diffusion of light, but plenty of absorption and discoloration. If it be an outer deposit of dust, etc., then there will be slight absorption but heavy diffusion. Both interior and outer deposits are bad—the latter very bad, indeed, because they result from carelessness on the part of the projectionist."

NEW YORK S. M. P. E's MEETING

In the auditorium of the Engineering Building, New York City, the New York Branch of the SMPE held a most successful meeting on the evening of December 9.

The purpose of the meeting was to hear a lecture and view a demonstration of the latest developments of hill and dale disc record sound recording, given by Mr. H. A. Fredericks, of the Bell Telephone Laboratories, as reported by Mr. Fredericks to the SMPE at Swampscott, Mass. This was followed by a highly entertaining lecture on music production and reproduction, delivered by Leopold Stokowski, conductor of the famous Philadelphia orchestra.

By way of explanation, the "hill and dale" method of recording sound on disc records is exactly the opposite of the method now in commercial use. As many and perhaps all of you know, the present method of recording is to cause the recording needle to swing sidewise, thus creating tiny undulations in the side of the record groove, these undulations representing sound. The new method involves the use of an entirely different method and the use of a permanent diamond or sapphire-pointed needle. The recording of sound is not made on the sides of the groove but, instead, in its bottom.

The sound demonstration was by far the best to which your editor has ever been privileged to listen, and that perhaps was in part due to the reproduction apparatus itself. At the rear of the stage was a handsome board containing, as I recollect, eight loudspeakers, arranged, four on a side in semi-circular fashion. Between these sets were four loudspeakers with an opening apparently not more than three inches in diameter. The eight large speakers at the outer edge were for the lower frequencies. The central, tiny loudspeakers were devoted to the reproduction of the high frequencies.

Mr. Fredericks' explanation of this was as follows: "If the high frequencies were put through the outer loudspeakers, they would go forward in a narrow beam very much like that projected by a searchlight. If the listener chanced to be within the range of this beam, all right; if not, the high frequencies would be largely lost. With the arrangement above described it is possible to produce the loud frequencies with essentially the same spread as were given the lower frequencies, hence the mixture of the two produce quite close to perfection in effect."

That the effect is very nearly perfect will be vouched for by every member of the audience. J. I. Crabtree, past president, afterward said: "I feel Bell Laboratories is to be congratulated on its achievement. The canned music I have heard tonight is the first of its kind I have ever been able to enjoy."

Insofar as the records themselves are concerned, they are designed to run at slow speed. Mr. Fredericks informed us that in the laboratories they had succeeded in getting a fifteen-minute musical program on one twelve-inch record. One reason for this is that, whereas in the present records there must be a space of from four to five thousandths of an inch between the grooves, there is no such necessity in the hill and dale records, in which grooves may even be really overlapped to a certain extent, since the record is entirely in the bottom of the groove.

This, however, as was pointed out by George Edwards, projectionist, may or may not induce an increased tendency of the needle to jump from one groove to another. Mr. Fredericks thinks not. However, it seems that this might very well be true. The new type of record is made from an almost entirely nonabrasive material. However, as pointed out, it would seem that the effects of the dust and dirt, more or less present in practical projection, might and probably would be more injurious with this method than with the old.

Mr. Fredericks made the statement that needle scratch noise is due almost entirely to minute irregularities in the record and that to have entire freedom from such noises, the groove walls of the record must be as smooth as well polished plate glass. He also said that, because of the exceedingly minute area of a sharp phonographic needle, the pressure of the needle point upon the surface of the record might be as much as 50 to 75 tons a square inch, which would, however, soon drop down to perhaps 25 tons a square inch as the needle point became flattened by friction.

A part of the demonstration was an illustration of the enormous damage worked upon sound by the elimination of the higher frequencies, though the cutting out of high frequencies serves to reduce needle scratch noise, which becomes inaudible when every thing above 5,550 frequencies is eliminated.

I asked Mr. Fredericks what the highest and lowest sound frequencies were. He answered to the effect that he did not know; that the limit had never been measured and that much would depend upon the keenness of the individual ear. He said that a child might not only hear very low frequencies, but frequencies as high as 20,000.

Mr. Stokowski seemed to think that the practical limit is somewhere around 13,000. The limit of reproduction apparatus is at this time about 9,000.

Mr. Stokowski, with the aid of the Bell Laboratories, has had certain sound measurements made. He found the sound frequencies of the trumpet to be about 8000, the piccolo to be 6000, the oboe 13,000, the violin 8000, the cymbal 13,000 or more, the xylophone 6000 and the snare drum 13,000 or more.

Mr. Stokowski said that the present method of reading music is enormously inadequate. Said he: "Composers often are enormously disappointed because of the limitations of present methods of recording musical ideas, which are so very lacking that they, the composers, very often find the reproduction to be very dissimilar to what they have had in mind."

Conductor Stokowski then expressed the opinion that at no far distant day, composers will cease to write music as now, instead painting their ideas in exact terms of frequencies and volume range. A novel idea indeed, but even to the layman it seems not at all impossible. As I understand it, Conductor Stokowski has in mind that instead of the "notes" now so familiar to us all, the composer will use, in their stead, symbols which will express exact frequencies and exact volume, with the other necessary marks denoting rhythm, tempo and so on.

Some Service!

Jack H. Hewson, theatre service engineer connected with the Northern Electric Company, Ltd., Montreal, has a most novel and unusual method of being "Johnny-on-the-spot" when anything goes wrong with the sound at any of the scattered theatres in his territory. Both Hewson and his wife are radio enthusiasts, and licensed operators. He has a short-wave radio-telegraph transmitting and receiving set at home, and in the service car he uses on his frequent trips, is another short-wave receiver. At regular 15-minute intervals he tunes in on his home, and if in the meantime a theatre has sent a call for help the operator there cuts in and delivers the "SOS". That's some service.

THE PROPOSED APERTURE CHANGES

By F. H. RICHARDSON

At a breakfast and two-hour talk with Mr. Lester Cowan, executive secretary of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, I was privileged to get at first hand data concerning the Academy's efforts to set up standard apertures. It seems to me excellent that this effort is being made.

Sample of the new film frames, exactly at full size. Note the wide, transparent lines.

Mr. Cowan has, during his visit to New York City, brought about a meeting of representative men for final consideration of the proposed changes in camera and projector apertures, the changes having already been approved by the large producers, exhibitors and large theatre circuit operators.

Before setting forth the chief reasons for the change, let me point out the fact that from the production viewpoint it will (A) Reduce or eliminate the waste incident to the present practice of setting up (in the studios) for composition in three apertures, namely, full frame, sound-on-film (Movietone) and proportional, all of which causes much delay, which is of course very expensive. (B) It will bring about other studio economies. (C) Quality will be improved, insofar as concerns theatre audiences, for the reason that productions will be projected as they are photographed, without the deletions now incident to changing from silent or Vitaphone to sound-on-film with proportional apertures. (D) Because of the difference in height of stage setup, it will be possible to lower the microphones fully five feet, which should make for improved quality in sound. There will be many other advantages, as viewed from production.

As to the theatres, the actual cost of the change will be trifling. The advantages, on the other hand, will be large. In the first place, all pictures will be projected through one standard size aperture .615" high by .820" wide including silent, Vitaphone and sound-on-film, thus eliminating the nuisance of aperture changes, recentering lenses, and so on. Every projectionist will understand what a relief that will be. Because of the standardization of exact dimensions, the prints should be of uniformly better quality in almost every way. Theatres now using proportional apertures will gain about 4 per cent in picture area without added magnification. Theatres now using either sound-on-film or the old silent size apertures will have the advantage that the studios may fill the entire area of the new standard aperture with dramatic action, whereas now there must be a border kept free from important action.

As to changes required, theatres now using proportional apertures may either file them out to the new standard size, or install new ones. Their screens must be enlarged by about 4 per cent of their total area. Those now projecting in sound-on-film proportions must equip their projectors with new aperture plates and reduce the screen surface at both top and bottom, or else install shorter focal length lenses and increase the screen width. Theatres now using the old silent aperature must install new aperature plates and decrease screen vertical height at top, bottom and sides, or in lieu thereof install shorter focal length lenses to project a wider picture and reduce screen at top and bottom.

The cost of the necessary changes will not be much of a burden. For the most part the theatre force may make the necessary screen alterations, at very small cost.

For more than twenty years I have ob jected to the outraging of the screen image by distortion set up by excessive projection angles, which not infrequently has been carried to such an extent that the picture has been "stretched" (that, literally, is the correct term) until the picture has been square, instead of having its presumed proportions of height equals three-fourths of width, in which proportions all silent pictures have been photographed.

This particular abuse has its base in the fact that exhibitors have insisted that no seating capacity be sacrificed in order properly to place the projection room—place it so there would be little or no picture distortion.

They were apparently unable to understand the simple, rather obvious fact that whereas their action did permit of some additional seats and place the projection room far up and back, entirely out of the way, it also made all seats less useful because of the fact that distortion mars the beauty of the screen image, and beauty in the screen image is one feature which helps in inducing theatre patrons to "come again." Often I have entered a theatre in which there was steep projection angle, with consequent heavy picture distortion, to find many vacant seats. I have wondered how many of those empties would be filled were the screen image made more beautiful by the absence of distortion. I have never for one moment had the slightest doubt but that the increase in beauty in the undistorted picture would fill at least some of them, or that the "some" would be more than sufficient to make up for the seat deletion a proper projection room location might cause.

When the change was under consideration, the Academy secured the co-operation of Mr. Harry Rubin, Director of Projection for Publix, Mr. Lester Isaac, Director of Projection for Loew, Inc., and of Western Electric through ERPI. A general survey of projection angles was made, with result that it was found that Publix theatres have an average of 18 degrees, Loew, Inc., 17.5 and those theatres equipped with Western Electric sound apparatus had an average of 19 degrees, which would seem to indicate that city theatres, at least, have an average projection angle of approximately 18 degrees.

It was therefore decided that, since proper projection room location seemed far off, it would be best to adopt camera and projector aperature dimensions which, through the action of the distortion set up by an 18 degree angle, would place on the screen a picture of the usual, normal 3—4 proportions, which was found to be as before set forth.

It must be admitted that this plan has serious objections, not the least of which is, as I pointed out to Mr. Cowan, that it would have the effect of standardizing the 18 degree projection angle, which is much more than it should be. In fact in my opinion and in the opinion of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, anything above 12 degrees may be considered as excessive. Another serious objection is that while the new aperture will restore the picture outlines to normal if the projection angle is 18 degres, it will have no effect whatsoever in eliminating distortion in the picture itself. That is to say, while the outlines will be normal (provided the angle be 18 degrees), still every object in the screen image will be stretched up and down and distorted sidewise exactly as much as it now is, except that of course the height to be submitted to stretching will be reduced.

However, while the plan is far from ideal, on the grounds of the greatest good for the greatest number, I presume the action will prove to be a wise one, though I don't quite know just what the effect will be on the theatres which have either level projection, or less than an 18 degree angle. They will of course have a wider picture, of much less than normal height. Possibly this will work out allright, though as to that time alone can give the answer.

I do hope some day this in some ways rather foolish industry will awaken to the rather obvious fact that, however well concealed, the evil effects of screen image distortion produced by excessive projection angles operate to detract from the beauty and naturalness of the projected picture, and that correct projection room placement is the only solution which will produce maximum results in the projected picture, hence in box office income.

VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY

Well, Well, Wells!

IF THERE IS HOPE IN SOUND, THEN let Faith and Charity save us from Wells. When the Wellsian schoolmasters lift the mentality of the world's masses to that intelligent peak that no one has yet defined, then filmdom, commercial as it is, will mingle with the foremost on the heights.

The common attack on the film world's intelligence meets with little repulse. Perhaps we are sore from the flights into the intellectual that let us fall so hard, we are content to suck our wounds. That "Outward Bound" should sail past frozen box offices and "Abraham Lincoln"! Lincoln may well have said, "The entertainment of the people, by the people, for the people." H. G. Wells should have been interviewed after "Kipps" with an "Outline" behind him; he becomes pretentious.

When the highbrows of the world sell their wares at a price that the inhabitants of the Main Streets of the world can afford, when the works of art and great music are not confined to the capitals of the world, then they will have some justification for asking the film world to take part in The Great Uplift Movement that never starts.

Wells calls the showmen "dreadfully illiterate persons," then wants Chaplin to make more and less perfect and imposing pictures. Sir Henry Irving must have had his type in mind when he said: "The Public doesn't know what it wants, give it it."

The old formula of "make 'em laugh, make 'em cry, and thrill 'em" seems to have been forgotten since The Elite were allowed to mix with filmdom. They used to play to the heart; now they play to the head, and it's aching a bit. They cater to motor cars—who was the fellow who said he catered to tram cars because they held more? He should be given a place in every conference. Wells suggests this complex with his chuckling manner. Chevalier is nearer the crowd than Chopin and more people were made happy with Bow than with Bernhardt. All commercial entertainment should be just a step behind taste. There are always the pioneers who determine taste, but they are never commercial, and isn't this a business, anyway—or should it be anyhow?

When they put the speed of the silent into the talkie we will again recover our supremacy. The talkie is so slow they can see the faults—faults there always will be—but don't dwell on them, tell the story in pictures and let talk be a valuable aid. Move—think more of action than inflection, take your artists out into the fresh air, move them on a canvas that hasn't the studio walls to cramp its dimensions, let the screens of the world be something to look out and beyond, not just another wall.

We want more newspapermen in the studios. I would accept the considered opinion of one good journalist to ten literary men. Newspapermen have to entertain the readers every day. The newspaperman sees a story that's human in a poor child trying to recover a lost dime from a manhole; the literary man sees only carelessness. Here's to the return of motion pictures. P'raps we'll get them if we can ease the heavy hand of Wall Street a little as well.—JACK PRENDERGAST, General Manager, Rialto Cinema, York, England.

Begs to Differ

I HAVE READ WITH INTEREST AND quite some satisfaction the item in the MOTION PICTURE HERALD of December 5, telling about the improvement in Kansas. I am a native Kansan and I think "she" is a mighty good state to live in, but as a matter of fact I don't think things are quite as rosy as the item would have us believe.

To be right accurate about it, from what I can learn, the 50-cent wheat price didn't stay with us very long. Our elevator man tells me they haven't paid 50 cents for wheat generally, only a load or two for special milling. The price today is 40 cents and 26 cents for corn.

Just thought I'd give you another side of the situation. Perhaps when you received the information contained in the item, the case was as you stated. I only wish that by the time you receive this letter the prices I am quoting will be 'way below what farm products are bringing. I'll be glad to be wrong about it.

Oh, well, anyhow, what's the difference? These are great days to be "livin'," "ain't they?"—FERD J. LEDAUX, Manager, Perkins theatre, Holton, Kan.

B. I. P. Launches Sales Campaign

Sidney Garrett, general manager of B. I. P., British company, and Bill Rabell, general sales manager, left New York on Thursday for a swing around the country to open up new territory for B. I. P. product, which will be disposed of to state right exchanges. Garrett will cover the middle-west, while Rabell's itinerary will take him south. Stanley Whiteley, treasurer, will be in charge of the home offices, which are now located in the Film Center Bldg., during the absence of Rabell and Garrett.

Six of the season's scheduled 24 features are available for release. Heading the list is "Gables Mystery," directed by Harry Hughes, with Lester Matthews and Anne Grey; "Bridegroom for Two" and "My Wife's Family," comedy features; "The Flying Fool," which recently played pre-release at Warner's Broadway and Warner's Beacon, New York; and "Fascination," Madeleine Carroll, starred.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut toward such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

MUSIC AND TALENT

CIRCUITS EXTEND VAUDEVILLE PLAN

Stage Acts Installed in Eight Publix Houses, Making a Total of 100 Theatres Now Offering Vaudeville

By ED DAWSON

Eight Publix houses in Pennsylvania and New England have installed vaudeville, five of them for three days each week and two for the full week. This brings the total of Publix houses playing vaudeville to 100.

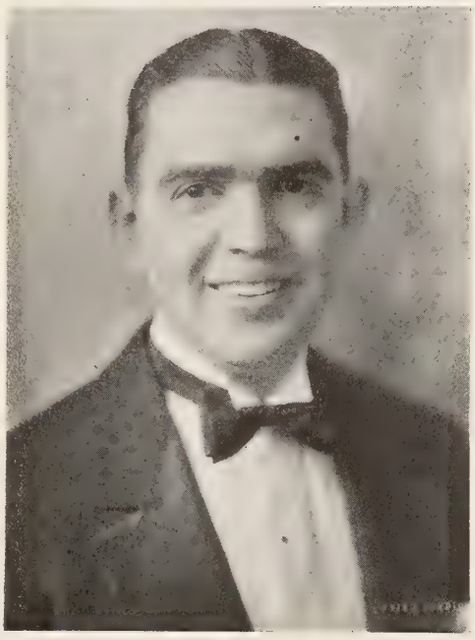
The eight, in D. J. Chatkin's territory are Capitol, Williamsport, Pa.; Capitol, Pottsville, Pa.; Penn, Wilkes Barre, Pa.; Capitol, Hazelton, Pa.; Colonial, Haverhill, Mass.; Palace, Stamford, Conn.; Strand, Stamford, Conn.; Paramount, Springfield, Mass.

Box office grosses from these theatres will be carefully watched over a period of weeks, and if returns justify the inclusion of vaudeville on the program, the stage presentations will be made a permanent feature. Twenty Publix houses have added vaudeville within the past year, 10 of which are using Fanchon & Marco units.

Special exploitation campaigns have been put over in each of the towns, featuring a "return" of vaudeville as a welcome feature of the theatre's programs. Present indications are that the stage acts are well liked in the several locations. Manager Ben M. Cohen of the Capitol in Hazelton, reported S.R.O. business on the opening day, with the entire town rating the resumption of the acts as a public event. The unusual results obtained by Cohen are attributed to the lively manner in which he "sold" his patrons on the addition to his regular programs.

Publix House Tries Vaudeville

The Rex, Mt. Gilead, O., Publix house, will switch from straight films to a combination vaudeville policy one night a week, with talent from various radio stations. Amateur talent will take the stage one night a week, also and another will feature the "country store" idea.



May Revive Vaudeville

Vaudeville is scheduled for a return at the RKO Downtown, Detroit, on December 26, it is understood. Negotiations with stagehands has delayed the resumption of vaudeville at the house.

Acts Return to Pittsburgh

Vaudeville is scheduled for a reappearance in Pittsburgh, with the Harris, Enright and RKO Sheridan Square set to open on a policy of three, four and five shows a day about Christmas week. Independent, Warner and RKO acts will be booked.

"BROWNIE"

This smiling countenance belongs to one Arthur N. Brown, popularly known to the audiences of the Paramount theatre, Charlottesville, Va., as "Brownie." He recently opened this latest Paramount-Publix theatre, and according to the local papers is already one of the big favorites of that city. When one knows him personally, it is easily understood just why he should become "the fair-haired boy" so quickly. He's husky, personable and a good organist and he works hard to put over his work and give his fans entertainment.

Brownie hails from Burlington, Vt., where he played at and opened the Flynn theatre. He was in Burlington for five years and he was known throughout the state as "The Maple Sugar Kid."

F. & M. Ideas Are Expected At San Antonio, Texas, Jan. 1

It is almost certain that F. & M. Ideas will go into the Texas theatre, San Antonio, January 1. Fanchon and Marco already has announced it will take over the present Publix Unit shows on that date, which thereby will combine two of the largest circuits and bring back to the state of Texas what it has been longing for during the past few years and create a greater theatrical spirit for San Antonio, Dallas, Houston and Fort Worth. Upon the heels of this comes the news that the Hughes-Franklin theatres are to build in Dallas and Houston with the possibility that they may branch out to San Antonio and even Fort Worth.

Warner Offering Acts in 18 Small Towns in East; Five Units to Take Road At a Time; M. C., Chorus in Each Show

Warner Brothers' circuit will put into effect on Christmas Day a program of stage shows for one, two and three-day stretches at a number of its small theatres in and around Pennsylvania, as well as several other spots in New England and the Middlewest. Approximately 18 small towns are included in the itinerary of the units.

Each of the acts will contain a band, master of ceremonies and routine chorus, with the m.c. acting as comedian. Jerry Mayo and Bob Alton, staff producers for the Stanley in Pittsburgh, will produce the presentations, to be offered on the Fanchon & Marco unit plan. Five band acts will be placed on the road at one time, each with a separate bus for traveling.

Among the towns scheduled for the vaudeville presentations are Charleston, S. C.; McKeesport, Parkersburg, Butler, Sharon, Johnston, Pa.; Fairmont, Morganstown, Clarksburgh, W. Va.; Greensboro, N. C. In Ohio units are understood set for Steubenville and Lima, where the stage shows will play on a split-week policy. Additional stands in the East include the Roger Sherman, New Haven; Stanley, Jersey City; Branford, Newark.

Already booked by the Warner office for the units are Bryan McDonald, Roy Sedley, Schwartz and Clifford, Jones and Rea, Joe and Jane McKenna and Bob Carney and Jean. Certain details of the playing time are yet to be worked out.

Toronto Sees Vaude Return

The scheduled reopening of vaudeville at the newly-named Roxy theatre in Toronto, on December 24, is seen there as an indication of the return of the stage presentations to Canadian cities. Films will be shown as well. The same policy in other houses is announced.

To Test Music Copyright

The Shubert brothers, through their attorney, William Klein, plan to file suits against radio stations, to test whether or not any broadcasting company can use a copyrighted song without giving credit to the theatrical production from which it may be taken.

Organist Transferred

"Smiling" Bob Bailey (Ralph Jones), recently organist at the Paramount, Denver, is being moved by Publix to another spot, as yet undetermined.

STAGE SHOWS

New York Paramount

Week ending December 17

"Romantic Rhythm," featuring Bing Crosby and staged and devised by Boris Petroff, had little in it to make it outstanding. Though it was entertaining it was not up to the usual standard of this house. The show opens cleverly with the 16 David Bines Girls going into a snappy dance routine after making their entrance from an Austin which was driven on the stage. Eleanor Powell's tap-body wiggle dance routine was presented with the greatest of ease and in an unusually showmanly manner. Miss Powell's work was one of the outstanding bits of this show and she deserved the encore the audience requested. Buck and Bubbles, colored comedians, held up the comedy end of the bill with their droll actions, and gained a good hand at the finish. The 16 Bines Girls, neatly costumed, offer a routine of body-wiggles just before Crosby's entrance and then serve as a background for him as he sings "Time on My Hands," "River Stay 'way from My Door," and "Call Me Darling." Crosby's fine voice, which is known to millions, is proving a box-office attraction here, but it is a wonder to this reviewer why Crosby does not show the audiences that happy smile and pleasing personality that we know he has.

A clever entrance, serving as introduction for Yolanda and Velez, is effected by the Bines girls who, in pairs, dance different type waltzes just before the famous dance team's entrance. Their offering consists of three types of walzing which they do with the greatest of ease and smoothness. Without a doubt they are the personification of grace, and it is a privilege to see them dance. The finale was a beautiful scene in which Crosby sang "As Time Goes By," as the ensemble and Yolanda and Velez stand by.

San Antonio Majestic

Week ending December 9

Headlining this week's RKO vaudeville is Henry Bergman, supported by Jean MacCoy, Anne Kozan and Harry C. Ward, in a little sketch entitled "Hams and Eggs," a playlet which deals with some stranded actors who find good cheer in a small lunch wagon. They drew a fair hand.

Next best was Hal Sherman, billed as "Mr. Saint Vitus Himself." His demonstration that his legs are about the most comical on the stage got quite a few hearty giggles.

Leon Navara, the personification of 1935, in mixing fun with music in an irresistible fashion, presents what's what in years to come, interrupting himself with piano playing.

"Southern Gaieties" concluded the stage show presentation with a modernistic glimpse of the dances, music and songs of the old plantation days down in Dixie way.

Roland Todd at Toronto Organ

Roland Todd, outstanding Canadian organist, is now handling the console at Shea's, Toronto. He plays at performances and special broadcasts. The organ is being heard regularly at numerous Toronto houses.

Fanchon & Marco to Head Publix Production & Music

All production and music activities of Paramount-Publix will be taken over by Fanchon & Marco on January 9, 1932. Negotiations were closed Tuesday by Milton Feld of Publix and all employees not under contract were given four weeks' notice.

Baltimore Hippodrome

Week ending December 18

The Tiffany Twins, recently of George White's "Scandals," opened the show with dancing to good applause interspersed with weak comedy chatter. Next came Margie Coates, offering a cycle of songs, "River, Stay 'way from My Door," "Just Because My Mother Knows Best," "We'll be Back Together Again," "It Takes a Good Woman Nowadays to Keep a Good Man Home," "What Am I Gonna Do When You're Gone." Next followed Jack and Kay Spangler in a comedy skit using a full stage set of a theatre ticket agency with burlesque signs of popular pictures like "Trader Hornpipe," etc., aided by Jack Oberman. Comedy chatter, songs and dances went over very well, Oberman playing the piano for some parts, finishing with an imitation of Jack Donahue and Marilyn Miller in dance. Then came Sully and Thomas, in comedy chatter, songs and dances. They finished with a tap rhythm dance to "St. Louis Blues."

Jack Peppler, in songs, started with "Nothing to do But Love," being interrupted by the pianist. Jack sang "I Surrender Dear," then there was a piano solo, and Jack sang "St. Louis Blues," then encoring with "Please Don't Talk About Me." Jack looks well and his act is snappy and funny. Next came Allan Reno singing "The Single Man," preliminary to the work of his Ritzmore Orchestra, a comedy aggregation like a country band.

Milwaukee Wisconsin

Week ending December 10

Fanchon & Marco's "Montmartre" Idea opens with a Parisian setting representative of a flower market on a street in a French city. James La Marr sings an introductory number followed by the Belcher De Valery dancing girls garbed in green dresses with flowery head pieces. The Duval Sisters wind up the first episode with a snappy tap dance number.

With a background of motion pictures showing street scenes in Paris, a young woman and her partner glide about in what appears to be a type of ballroom Apache dance. The chorus augmenting the number is attired in black Spanish costumes with orange slippers and orange flowers.

The Duval Sisters again entertain with a fast and furious specialty number followed by Dolores, Eddy and Douglas, adagio trio, who present an excellent performance and receive a fine hand for their efforts.

For its next offering the chorus is attired in Russian costumes wearing masks. David Robel twists and twirls in a typical Russian dance, augmenting the chorus in this episode.

Joe Jackson is back with his trick bicycle and humorous antics which garner chuckles from the audience. For the finale the entire troupe appears on the stage and the colorful back ground is further enhanced by a merry-go-round with a fancy noise-maker attached.

Organ Firms Merge

Organ manufacturing facilities of Skinner Organ Company, Boston, and Aeolian Company, New York, are to be merged. Arthur H. Marks, president of The Skinner Company, will be president of the new company.

Julius Rosenthal Passes Away

Julius C. Rosenthal, 47, general manager of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, died last Sunday at his New York home, after an illness of three weeks. He was general manager of the society for the past 16 years.

ORGAN SOLOS

MR. AND MRS. JESSE CRAWFORD (New York Paramount) presented another of their outstanding and beautifully played concerts entitled "Organ Reveries." The duet consisted of "The Lost Chord" and "When the Organ Played at Twilight," and was played on the two new, four-manual stage consoles, which resemble grand pianos. Enhancing the marvelous registrations and beautiful combinations which the Crawfords effected, in their playing, a beautiful scene of angels was seen through a scrim curtain as the last strains of the organs were heard. Audience reaction to this presentation was decidedly favorable.

PAUL HURST (South Pasadena Rialto) offered a program consisting of recent hits, including "Many Happy Returns" and "Pagan Moon." This young man's pleasing personality and nice style of playing have made him very popular.

GRAY BURT (Westwood Westwood). This New Jersey organist presented two solos in one this week. The first was a straight community sing in which popular numbers were played. The second was a special called "Football Fancies," and was put on at the last show only for the local football teams, who attended en masse, and as a sequel to the feature picture, "Spirit of Notre Dame." The organist is a hard worker and, even though he is working with half an organ, he does surprisingly well. The audience, of course, don't know it and just about drowns it out when they sing.

TED MEYN (Jersey City Jersey) presented his final community singing solo last Thursday night at this theatre. This solo was built up of songs, appropriately chosen to designate his feelings for the audience and his reluctance to leave them. Whether it was good showmanship or a reaction to the tremendous ovation given him. Meyn had tears streaming down his face as he closed his solo and the show could not go on for at least five minutes. This, to this reviewer, is proof conclusive that an organist who works hard to please his audiences is a worthwhile asset to a theatre and one part of the theatre programs which should be featured more.

G. HOWARD SCOTT (Asbury Park Convention Hall and Radio Station WCAP) recently presented a thoroughly enjoyable program consisting of the following semi-classic, classic and popular numbers: 'Scheherezada," "Largo" from Xerxes, Sextette from "Lucia," "Trees," "Volga Boatman," "I Apologize," "Lies," selections from "The Spring Maid," "William Tell Overture," "The Rosary," "Whistler and His Dog," "March Carnivalesquer," and "End of a Perfect Day." Mr. Scott uses MacDowell's "To the Sea" as his theme song, both before and to close his programs. Each concert is of an hour's duration, with a 15-minute intermission and is presented twice daily, consisting of request numbers from his audiences in the Hall and his radio fans. It is a distinct pleasure to sit in this huge hall, which is built over the ocean, and sit back comfortably and listen to the beautiful strains sent forth by Mr. Scott's nimble fingers.

OVERTURES

YASHA BUNCHUK (New York Capitol) conducted the Capitol Grand Orchestra in a potpourri of popular classics, compiled by himself, and entitled "Parade of Great Composers." The selections included Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Capriccio Espagnole," "Bolero" by Ravel, Ippolitow-Iwanow's "Caucasian Sketches," the last movement from Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto, "Orpheus" by Offenbach and the "Meditation" from "Thais" by Massenet. Without a doubt this is one of the most beautifully presented and played overtures Bunchuk and his orchestra have ever offered, though it was apparently above the heads of most of this audience.

FRED SCHMITT (Denver, Denver) arranged an overture that featured every member of the Denver theatre orchestra. The numbers were enthusiastically received at every show. The orchestra members were featured in the following selections: "Tarantello," four violins; "The Merry Lark," flute and clarinet; "Nola," three saxophones; "Dainty Miss," piano solo; "Rolling Thunder," brass trio, and for a windup the entire orchestra in the stirring number "Thundering Rhythm."

WALT ROESNER (San Francisco Fox) and the Fox Concert Orchestra take the audience away down South in a "Southern Overture" in which folk lore, negro spirituals and semi-classic melodies of Dixie are aptly blended. It opens in a rather startling fashion with the imitation of a train in which special effects are provided by the organ, the introduction finally merging into the familiar strains of "The Robert E. Lee." Selections from "Dixie," "Old Black Joe," "Old Kentucky Home" and the "New World Symphony" come in for special attention.

SAMUEL BENAVIE (Detroit Fisher) is more than a master musician, as proven by this week's overture offering as a distinctive novelty, the orchestra plays a modern arrangement of Offenbach's "Orpheus." The screen trailer announcement informs the audience that "Asil Houette" will conduct the overture. The travelers open, disclosing a decorated screen, in the center of which is a scrim. The stage and house lights are dimmed, and Benavie's silhouette appears on the scrim. He raises his baton, the musicians come to attention, and with the down-beat of the stick, swing into the popular strains of the melody. Benavie always has favored the unusual in his overtures. The best example of his ability is the current offering.

PHIL FABELLO (New York Coliseum) and His Entertainers presented an overture built up from "The Volga Boatman," with comedy prevailing. Fabello cleverly introduced the stunt with words that were carefully chosen and smartly presented. The overture was compiled with special arrangements of the "Boatman" number into the different tempos of other nations. Opening with a regular arrangement, Fabello then made his announcement and the orchestra played the number as it would be played in Italy, China, Germany, Scotland and Jerusalem. Laughable comedy situations naturally appear but the outstanding work of this orchestra is their fine musicianship.

BENJAMIN KLASMER (Baltimore Hippodrome) presented a short overture of selections from Victor Herbert operettas just prior to the opening of the six acts of vaudeville, the featured number being a trumpet solo, "When Day Is Done."

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

HELLO, EVERYBODY!

Well, just one more week and old man Santy will be on his way back home. . . . Hurrah, sez I . . . do I hear any seconds. . . Anyway, We're gonna have a Happy New Year, at least that is what Jack Murray, Al Goodhard and Al Hoffman have said in their new DeSylva, Brown and Henderson tune and believe me that is a darned good tune to learn. . . . Not only that, but after hearing Eddie Moebus demonstrate it in one of the piano rooms of this firm (though I'm not a critic of music), I unhesitatingly recommend it and feel that this tune is a "natural" which will outlive the new year. . . .

Conrad Nagel and Joan Marsh are doing a peach of a skit in Loew's deluxers. . . . Al Skinner, who left the Robbins Music Corporation early this year to associate himself with his brother, Frank Skinner, noted arranger, has again joined the ranks of this firm as Detroit representative, and has established offices in that city. . . . Will Rockwell, pro. manager of Harms, has working for him a young chap named Ted Novak, who is a go-getter. . . . Ted knows all the orchestra leaders in town and takes good care to see that the Harms firm is always represented when they play or broadcast. . . . Every one of them think he is a great guy. . . .

Ted Meyn, popular organist at Loew's Jersey, Jersey City, opens Christmas day at the Loew's State, Cleveland, where he was featured two years ago. . . . Dick Leibert, who was at the Loew Pittsburgh house for two years, is succeeding Ted. . . . Another to open Christmas day is Adolph Goebel, Publix organist, formerly of the Paramount theatres in Springfield, Mass., and Atlanta, Ga. . . . Goebel opens at the Paramount, Omaha. . . . Arlo Hults of the RKO 86th Street theatre, New York is replacing Tom Grierson at the RKO Palace, Rochester, N. Y., for three weeks while Grierson is in Mexico City opening a Church organ. . . . Ken Widenor is taking Hults' place for this time. . . . Jimmy Colgin is back at the State, Waterbury, Conn., after a short vacation. . . . "Burke" Burkette is organist and musical director at Zaring's Egyptian, Indianapolis. . . . Sid Lindsey is the new organist at the Paramount, Newport News, Va., and Don Miller opens at the Olympia, Miami, Fla., on the 18th.

Sydney Green and Bon Walker have written a "hit" in "Dance of the Little Dutch Dolls," which Southern Music is publishing. . . . The tune has been used in a Paramount short, as an overture in all RKO metropolitan theatres, has had an organlogue made of it, has been made into a Victor record by Paul Whiteman, etc. . . . "Call Me Darling," the beautiful waltz that Lester Santly discovered in Germany last summer and brought back with him for Santly Bros., looks like it will reach the top of the best selling list before long. . . . It is already number 3, and if hard work and plugging means anything, then it'll be number 1 soon. . .

JACKIE COOPER SHOWS HIGH TALENT IN 'SOOKY'

Robert Coogan Shares Laurels in Sequel to "Skippy," Taurog's Sparkling Realism Wins Praise

JACKIE COOPER comes to the screen with another amazing performance in "Sooky," and Robert Coogan plays so well that he must be mentioned immediately, that no injustice may be done. Surely no co-stars of any age ever brought more credit to a production, stage or screen, than these little boys who rocketed to fame in "Skippy." This sequel to "Skippy" has the same tender appreciation of the psychology of boyhood. The story is of the heart, not the head, but remains logical and quite possible of happening in any American town. Those who have boys of the age of these will be astonished to hear from the screen almost exact quotations from their own youngsters, so definitely do lines and plot follow every-day family life.

from Shantytown

It is nothing less than a wonder that Norman Taurog, in his direction, should repeat the high success of "Skippy," and that the dialog and screen play should sparkle and surprise in the same authentic manner. The preview audience — even those who came from the studio and were thoroughly familiar with every detail—giggled and laughed and cried straight through, with happy forgetfulness of everything except what was happening on a square of white cloth out in front.

Back of this screen success, of course, is the genius of Percy Crosby, the comic strip artist who wrote the story and who knows the hearts and minds of little boys because he loves them. The principals of "Sooky" are all the same as those of "Skippy," but they cannot be just the same again should other pictures be made of these happy playmates. Sooky's mama dies in this picture, and Sooky goes to live with Skippy.

All these capable persons—Jackie Searl, Willard Robertson, Enid Bennett, Helen Jerome Eddy—support the child stars with sympathy and understanding. Harry Beresford, as an aged indigent who is carried away to the country farm despite Skippy's pleading contributes an episode of remarkable power and pathos.

"Sooky" is a good picture for children to see. It's a good picture for parents to see. Also for old folk to see. A good picture for anyone to see. See "Sooky." It will do you good.

SARASONE

The Screen of Perfection For Sound & Projection

Here's the Last Word in "TALKING SCREENS"

. . . flame-proof—seamless . . . amplifies and clarifies vision and sound!

NOW, with the SARASONE SCREEN, you have perfection in sound projection. Every modern requirement of good screens is retained and added refinements featured. The patented construction of the SARASONE SCREEN, combining selected yarns, interwoven with specially developed silver wire, produces myriads of tiny reflectors which produce clearer definition, greater depth, more lifelike images, and spreads sound without echoes or dead pockets. The SARASONE SCREEN, woven of durable, lasting materials, may be used for your present frame in any size for lacing or stretching. Better sound is produced because the screen permits easy passage of sound waves through it and vibrates in synchronism with the sound. No development since the invention of sound pictures has contributed as much to box-office receipts as the SARASONE SCREEN.

TESTED BY Electrical Testing Laboratories for Light and Inflammability. APPROVED "Acoustically" by Electircal Research Products, Inc., for use with Western Electric Sound System and by R.C.A. Photophone.

Manufactured by Draper Bros., Canton, Mass.

Priced Direct from Maker at 50% Saving to You

In tune with modern Economy in cost of equipment, SARASONE SCREEN CO., makers of the new SARASONE SCREEN, sell direct to theatres, eliminating the middlemen. This policy enables a saving in cost to theatres of about 50%.

Already, throughout this country and abroad, hundreds of small and large theatres have adopted the SARASONE SCREEN. In numerous instances, press reviews gave especial mention to the theatre's use of the new SARASONE SCREEN.

Leadership is Progress

NATIONAL Projector Carbons hold recognized leadership for all types of projection equipment.

Leadership is achieved and maintained only through progress. The Motion Picture Industry has attained its high rank in the business world as a result of steady progress . . . Improved quality of direction and photography . . . Larger and more beautiful theatres . . . Higher standards of service . . . Sound . . . Color . . . Better screen illumination. The march of PROGRESS.

National Projector Carbons keep pace with the progress of the industry. Backed by splendid research and manufacturing facilities, they meet or anticipate each new demand. The new National S R A Carbons and Pre-Cratered High Intensity Carbons are recent improvements making possible better projection and steadier screen illumination.

Use National Projector Carbons in your theatre. You will find the steady brilliance of screen illumination pleasing to your audiences and a source of increased patronage.

NOTES on WRITERS and SUBJECTS in this ISSUE

¶ Technically, theatres in the United States (and probably for the most part in the larger cities of Canada) are perhaps, in the aggregate, the finest in the world. It is asserted that we lag somewhat behind Europe in the use of modern illumination technics in combining lighting needs with aesthetic interests, and perhaps in the main we do not "go in" for as much experimentation in the general architectural treatment of the theatre. But in the essentials of proper motion picture exhibition, and also in stage technics, the American showman has taken great pride in keeping fully abreast of the times. That so many of our theatres fall short of being truly modern in their facilities for supplying pure air, cannot be blamed on any lack of desire for such facilities. Indeed, would not the average man building a home, like to have installed means whereby he wouldn't have to care what the weather was—he could control the "weather" within his home? It is relatively a new science, this air conditioning, and costs have necessarily been great. Even a simple ventilation system represents an expenditure great enough to cause many an owner of a particularly small, outlying theatre to attempt getting by with ordinary fans between the interior and outdoors—and not uncommonly, with merely wall and ceiling fans during the warm months. The development in recent years of cooling systems, or semi-elaborated ventilation systems, have gone far toward solving the problem, but even these will doubtless be subjected to further developmental work seeking more complete control of air conditions in either summer or winter at a cost making such systems accessible to most of those theatres having but moderate resources. Quite probably we can look forward to a time when the years of expensive experimentation will have been largely paid for and when past disbursements without contemporary return will not have to be charged against the product being marketed. But from present indications, such a time is somewhat distant, and meanwhile the public is demanding—the very conditions that are represented in the word "modern" are demanding—a more widespread incorporation in the theatre building of complete or semi-complete atmospheric control. Knowing that in several quarters efforts to reduce the cost of such systems have of late come to fruition, we sought to be advised of these results from one who would be well acquainted with this entire field. As physicist with one of the leaders in the field, the Carrier Engineering Corporation, D. C. Lindsay has been for years devoted to just such developmental work. We asked him just what, to his knowledge, was available for the small theatre now, and not only what the situation was regarding present costs, but what was now indicated for the immediate future. The result is Air Conditioning Small Theatres and Its Cost, in this issue.

¶ In his concluding article, Aaron Nadell refers to the remarkable range of knowledge the theatre manager has to have today in order to understand fully the problems of his business. He should be an expert in selling the show and his theatre to the public, of course—but, too, he must be able to criticize theatre arrangement and facilities, understand the needs and efficiency of his projection, and often must be able to purchase equipment and supplies wisely and supervise appreciatively their installation and use. Not to be an expert, of course, in all these departments, but at least to be able to suspect when his interests are being imposed upon. Thus does seating enter intimately into the purview of the manager and owner, for is there anything in the theatre (outside of projection, possibly) more important than seating? In his second article in the series, Modern Seating and Chair Maintenance, Reuben A. Nyhagen prepared for future articles by a selective discussion of what the chair is made of, and how. Mr. Nyhagen, who began his series in the November 21st issue, is a seating engineer, until recently affiliated with one of the leading public seating manufacturers. In the next issue of Better Theatres he will discuss problems of proper installation.

¶ It is somewhat regretfully that we must note the passing from these pages of Aaron Nadell's series, What the Manager Should Know About Sound. From the first article in the May 9th issue, it has been a stimulator of the kind of letters an editor likes to receive (and to show to the boss!). Mr. Nadell, a projection and sound engineer residing in New York, has been in a most excellent position to know the practical problems of the theatre, what the projectionists are so often "up against," and just how the manager could cooperate more effectively with them, and extend his general effectiveness. It is when such experience is interpreted against a background of thorough training in theory that it becomes especially valuable, and the series, "What the Manager Should Know About Sound," has obviously enjoyed this distinction. Perhaps something else particularly timely and practical can be "cooked up" for his pen a bit later.

¶ Another article in the department, Modern Projection, comes from one of extensive experience in his field. J. K. Elderkin (Rectifier Tubes: Operation and Care) was formerly on the staff of the late Thomas A. Edison. He now heads his own company, the Forest Electric Company of New York and Newark, N. J.

W. Scott Dunne (An 800-Seat Theatre Costing $50,000) is a Dallas, Tex., theatre architect.

Deluxe Seating... Acoustically Correct

THE chair shown above typifies the class, comfort, and box-office appeal of the new Heywood-Wakefield Theatre Seating. From every angle the new H-W Chairs have that class, comfort, and style which lend prestige and build profits for any theatre, regardless of size.

Most of the new H-W Chairs have been designed for use in sound houses. Several of them were developed in cooperation with Publix engineers who have made exhaustive studies of acoustical requirements in theatre equipment. The chair shown above is particularly adapted to sound use. Its soft, luxurious, sound absorbing upholstery; its custom type of tailoring on the seat and back; and its refreshingly modern aisle standard make this seat one of the most beautiful and practical designs ever built.

Publix has installed more than a quarter million H-W Theatre Seats. Many other leading chains and independents have also specified H-W Seats because of their fine workmanship, smart design, unusual comfort, and long wear. If you are planning to seat a new house or reseat an old one, it will pay you to get all the facts on H-W Theatre Seating. A note to the nearest H-W Sales Office will bring complete information.

Bigelow Lansdale Carpet

. . . chosen because it stands the grind!

Heavy heels, sharp heels, scuffling shoes, wet shoes —that's what Bigelow Lansdale is built to stand!

Lansdale is a thick, dense-piled Velvet specially created for theatres. Woven of lively wool, it assures years of beauty—and better acoustics too. At moderate cost this fabric reproduces the rich, colorful patterns typical of Wilton carpets. That's why prominent theatres pick Lansdale.

When you face the problem of carpeting your theatre, talk things over with our Contract Department men. They're experts—they know what fabrics are best and most economical for foyers, aisles, stairs. And our designing staff is always ready to cooperate in preparing special patterns and color schemes.

You can reach our Contract men at 385 Madison Avenue, New York, through our Branch Offices or through Distributors of Bigelow-Sanford Carpets.

ALWAYS A GOOD SHOW

AIR CONDITIONING SMALL THEATRES AND ITS COST

A timely response to a situation in which most small theatres are found without a combined system of heating-cooling-ventilating facilities capable of permitting control of air conditions independently of the weather

By D. C. LINDSAY

IT IS EASY for any of us to appreciate what atmospheric conditions —climate, the weather—mean to us. It is something that we are almost daily aware of, hence no matter how undependable the weather may be as a current outside atmospheric condition, it can be fully relied on as an interesting topic of conversation. We are air-conscious beings, and no wonder, since we live in air—and by it.

All this, of course, is so obvious that it really is not necessary to mention it. I do mention it, however, in order to emphasize a point that naturally follows from these great physiological facts, yet seems to be somewhat elusive. It is this:

Our response to atmospheric conditions is almost immediate: poor air conditions not only make us uncomfortable but temporarily reduce the range and efficiency of our faculties: good air conditions (other things being equal) permit us to function according to what is for each of us, normal.

Now it certainly would be a happy state of affairs if wherever we are — in our homes, in our stores and offices—the atmospheric conditions obtaining at any time were best adapted to the requirements of us air-breathing organisms. In our efforts to apply Science more and more to the control of nature to our benefit in everyday life, we shall doubtless arrive sometime at that happy state, or one approximating it. But perhaps in no other phase of our immediate environment does air conditioning assume the business importance that it has in the building devoted to public entertainment.

AS SUCH a building, the motion picture theatre has the characteristics of the class, yet (as it does in so many matters) it peculiarly emphasizes these characteristics and adds others. It is a place where people gather for pleasure. They are located in intimate proximity to each other. They come and they go, almost continually. Patrons themselves creators and diffusers of heat and poisons, they sometimes are few, sometimes are all the theatre will hold. The peculiar physical character of the theatre structure itself, and much of its equipment, work to aggravate the factors inimical to the sustained existence of good air, as we say.

Scientific labors in thermodynamics and allied fields, in chemistry, in mechanics and even in physiology, psychology and hygiene, have given us methods of controlling the condition of the air we breathe, but like many fields, its fruits have been costly.

Probably air conditioning will aways be essentially an engineering job for each specific theatre, and it may be that the total original cost will never get much below that possible now—approximately $15,000. But perhaps after all we should look upon air conditioning to be as necessary as other basic attributees of a modern theatre—like complete projection equipment, stage apparatus, etc. Of course, at present not only does relatively limited output prevent reduction in the costs of production, but there had to be experimentation and development and hundreds of thousands of dollars were spent without a single dollar's return. These factors naturally restricted the application of air conditioning in the theatre to the big, elegant deluxe theatres in the busier commercial centers of large cities. That facilities so desirable in the theatre as suitable air conditioning agencies would be always confined to such theatres, was scarcely to be considered, and of course continued developmental activities have looked toward the extention of these facilities to all theatres.

The pictures on this page are of the Studio theatre, 300-seat Hughes-Franklin house in Hollywood. The top view is of the outer lobby, at the left side of which, set into the sidewalk, will be noted a window. This looks down upon the compressor, as indicated in the smaller picture. This arrangement permits the public to see the machine—an exploitation stunt.

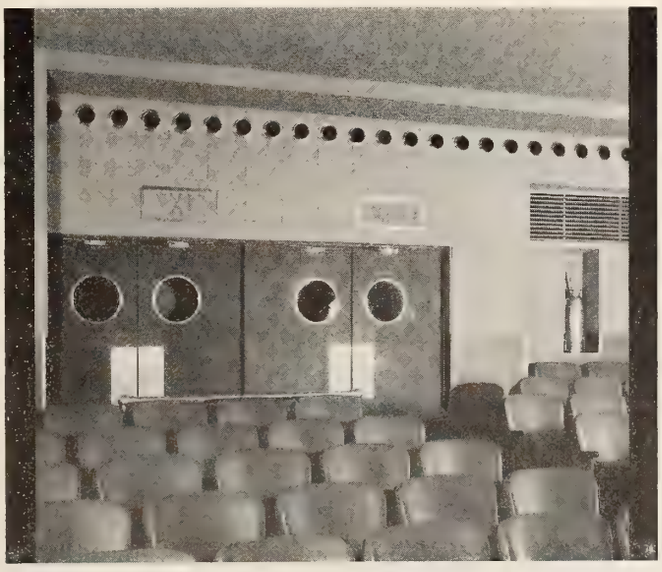
The elements necessary for air conditioning in the small theatre are precisely the same as they are in the large deluxe house. There must be means of maintaining definite relations of temperature, relative humidity and air motion. It follows that what is necessary is a system similar to that used in the large theatre, but merely of small capacity.

Here it probably should be pointed out that air conditioning does not mean merely cooling—nor merely ventilation. It means just that—air conditioning—and it embraces the heating plant as well as cooling and circulation agencies.

THE COOLING apparatus, however, is the costliest item in the system required for complete theatre air conditioning. Until fairly recently, the smaller theatre could not be expected to sustain the maintenance and operating charges of a refrigeration machine like that used in the large deluxe theatre. General air conditioning apparatus for small theatres have been available within sound economic limits for a number of years, but was for some time denied appreciable application because of the lack of refrigeration facilities in keeping with it. The eventual development of this unit has supplied the deficiency, and as a result theatres even so small as the 150-seat Trans-Lux theatre in New York, and the 300-seat Studio theatre in Hollywood, have complete air conditioning equipment.

The Studio installation more than serves as a concrete example of a small theatre system. It has some of those especially interesting characteristics present throughout the entirety of this unique little house. In the Studio installation, there is dehumidifying equipment in the attic space directly above the mezzanine lounge. This equipment takes outside air and return air, dehumidifies it, and the air is then diffused throughout the auditorium by means of a "horizontal diffusion system." At the same time, air from the same source is delivered to the mezzanine lounge, main foyer, projection room and even the outer lobby, or vestibule.

The refrigerating machine in the basement cools the water and pumps it to the dehumidifier in the attic. It also cools the drinking water in a foyer fountain. The refrigeration unit is located in the front part of the basement, directly under one side of the sidewalk, and over it is a heavy plate of glass through which passers-by and incoming patrons may view this representative of the Machine Age. Indeed, the public is invited to observe it by a sign on the sidewalk — an indication as to how air conditioning equipment may be exploited.



An air cooling unit by Carrier of the type used in the Studio theatre installation. This unit runs automatically (requiring no operator), and forms a part of a complete air conditioning system that embraces fan, spray, dampers, heaters, etc.

The small refrigeration unit is similar in operation to the centrifugal machine used in the large theatres, but it has some departures from the other's design, one of which is a direct attack upon the old bugaboo — costly operation and maintenance, which, as we pointed out, had to be eliminated. This small house unit is completely automatic in operation. It is fully enclosed and requires no engineer to run it. It can be serviced for around $200 a year. Such units are adapted to theatres seating from 500 (or less) to 900.

Just as the air can be cooled, similarly it can be heated, yet the system provides for rendering the air just as suitable in purity, temperature and relative humidity, and for delivering it to the proper parts of the theatre at the right pressure, as when the air is cooled in summer. In brief, the air is properly conditioned and circulated, being cooled or heated merely as the weather outside and as the changing size of the audience require.

THE CIRCULATING system embraces a departure from the larger systems that also represents a lowered cost. With reference to the Studio installation, I spoke of "horizontal diffusion." This eliminates the necessity of the more complicated duct arrangements. The air is admitted at high velocity through ejector nozzles located near the ceiling, and this stream of air sets up a uniform circulation of the entire volume of air within the room. The general direction of the flow is toward the faces of the audience.

The rear of the auditorium of the 150-seat Trans-Lux theatre in New York. The small ports at the ceiling are the ejector nozzles which admit the conditioned air. This system eliminates the elaborate "mushroom" and duct system of large theatres. This house is the smallest having complete air conditioning.

About a year or so ago it was found that a 500-seat theatre could operate an air conditioning system with full-control advantages, at the following costs per 10-hour day: Summer, $4.28; winter, $1.49. This would give a seat cost per day of .0086 of a cent in summer, and .003 of a cent in winter.

The above costs were calculated at 2c per kilowatt hour for electric power, and at 60c per thousand cubic feet for water. If the theatre is operated less than 10 hours a day, these costs, of course, are lowered.

Above: A view of the main foyer, looking through arch beneath the mezzanine balcony to the main staircase, revealing the essential modern pattern of the entire theatre. Tte foyer is of an oval shape.

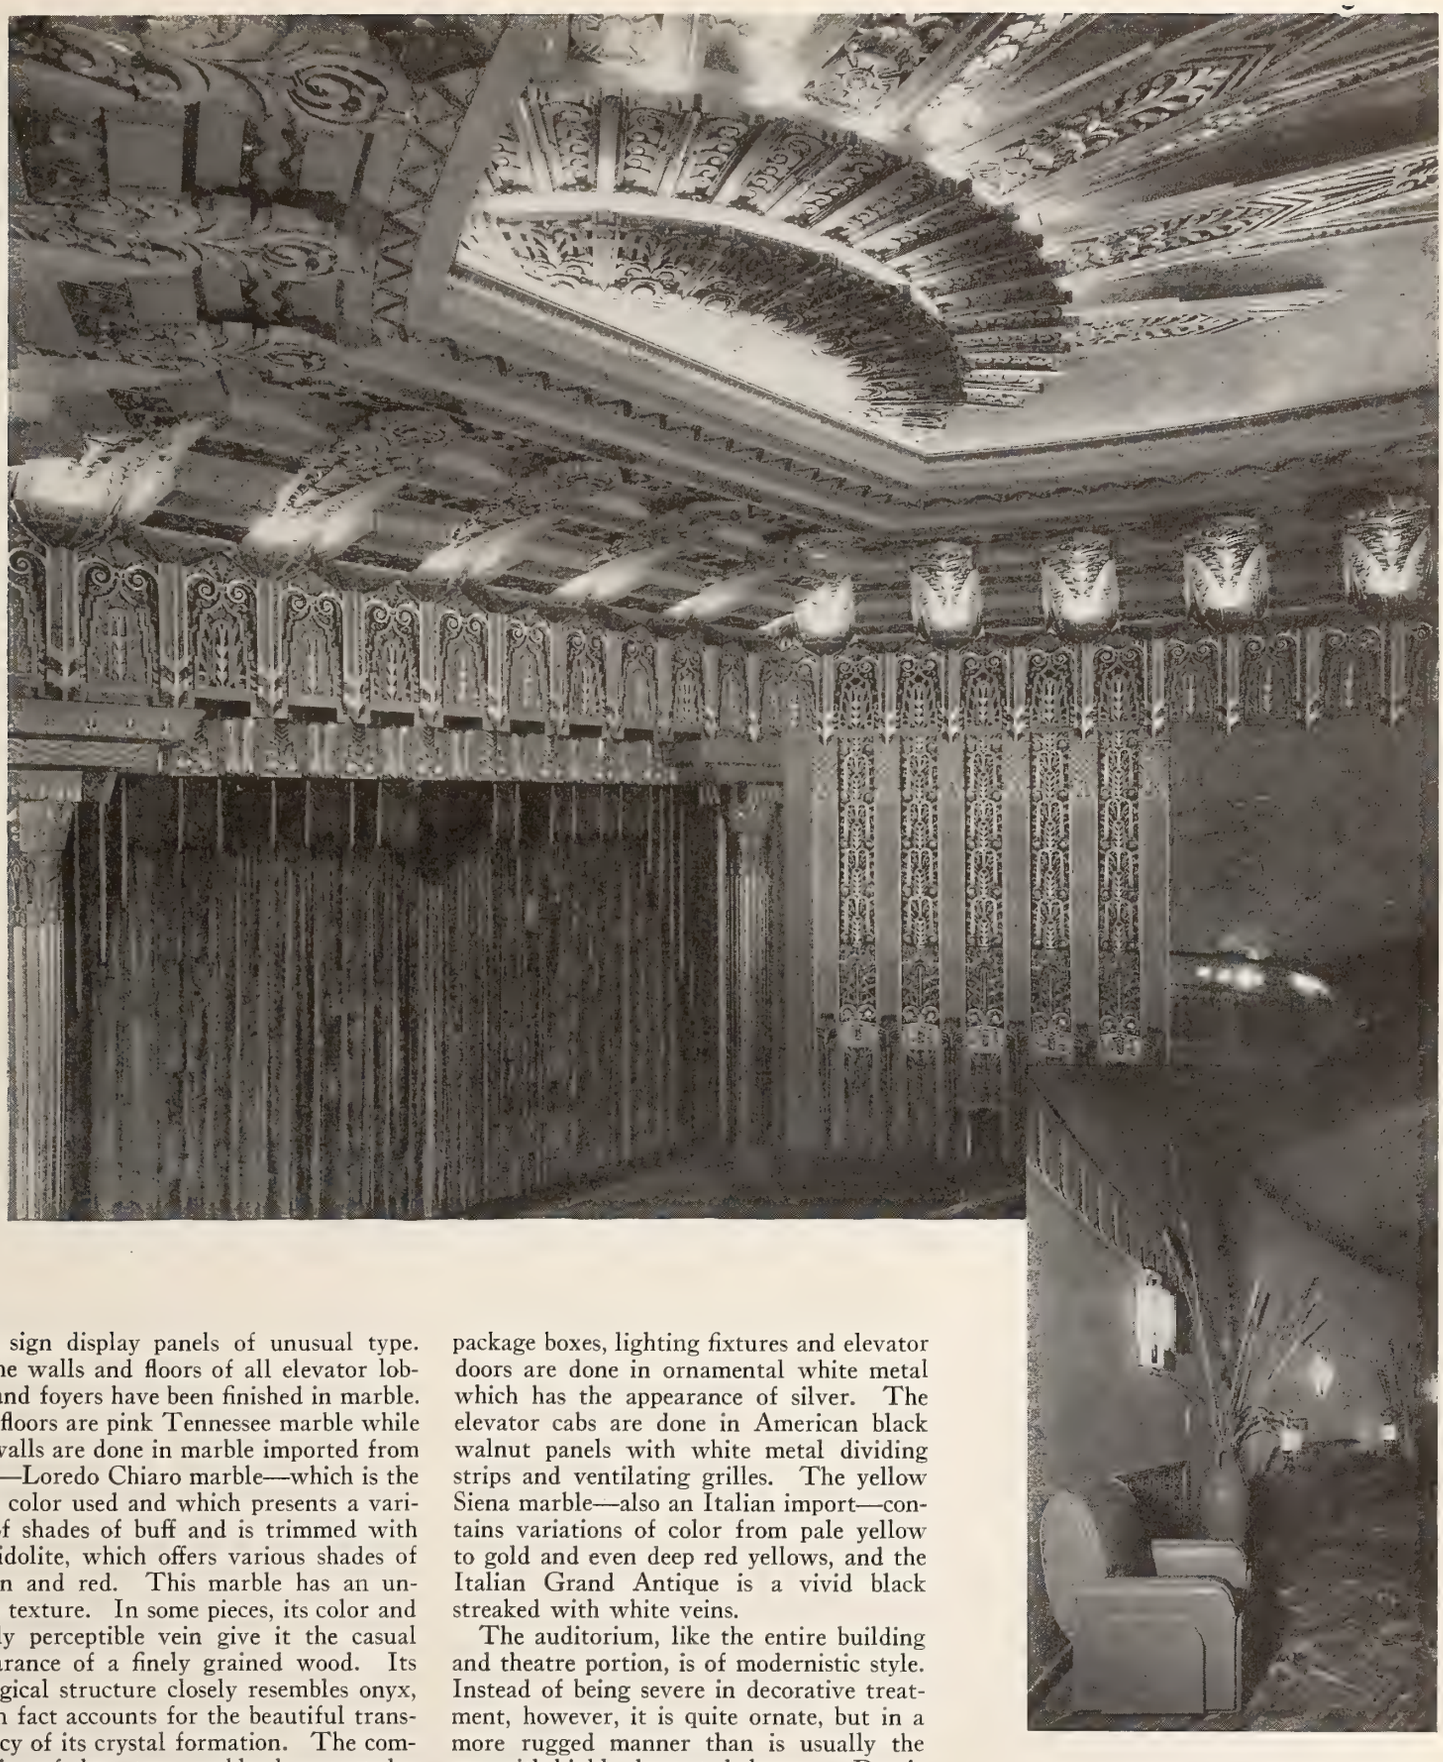
Below: Exterior of the building and entrance to theatre, showing ornate bridge erected over the street to facilitate traffic in this busy section on the opening night.

A NEW WARNER THEATRE IN UPTOWN LOS ANGELES

describing the Western in the busy Wilshire district

THE NEW Western theatre, Warner Brothers house in the Wilshire district of Los Angeles, is located in the tall Pellissier building on the southeast corner of the intersection of Wilshire and Western Boulevards. This is by actual survey one of the busiest of intersections. The modern office, theatre and shop building stands at the crossing of the city's two longest arteries. Western Avenue leads from Hollywood mountains to the Los Angeles harbor district, and Wilshire Boulevard is the principle highway between the business section of Los Angeles and the Santa Monica beach.

The building extends along a full 300-foot block on Wilshire Boulevard, and for 220 feet on Western Avenue. The tower office building is 190 feet high and is built over the theatre entrance and foyer. The facade of the office structure faces the intersection diagonally.



The building, architects for which were Morgan, Walls & Clements, consists of four distinct parts, all designed in modern style. The mercantile structure is made up of 20 two-story shops, 11 front on Wilshire, nine on Western and one on Oxford. The show windows of the second floor stores have been dropped several feet below the normal second floor level. This was done in order to create a second floor display space that would be more easily visible from the street level as well as from passing automobiles. A wide band of ornamental pressed metal separates the two levels of show windows. This band also serves as a background for the signs of the shop tenants. The theatre portion, which was designed by G. Albert Lansburgh, is set behind the two-story shops. The seating capacity of the theatre is 2,500.

A garage in the basement will accommodate 90 cars. Entrance to the garage is on Oxford Avenue.

The building is of reinforced concrete construction with machine made terra cotta veneer exterior in a blue-green color. Windows are steel with lead coated copper dividing spandrels which present the same color as reflected by the window voids. This gives the impression that the windows are in vertical slots and thereby emphasizes the vertical effect of the entire structure. The base of the building is black granite and the sidewalk is black terrazzo in a pattern of machine ground joints.

The entrance to the theatre has a colorful terrazo floor, and the walls are embellished with black marble and white metal. The theatre marquee, which has a highly ornamental ceiling, has been equipped with neon sign display panels of unusual type.

The walls and floors of all elevator lobbies and foyers have been finished in marble. The floors are pink Tennessee marble while the walls are done in marble imported from Italy—Loredo Chiaro marble—which is the main color used and which presents a variety of shades of buff and is trimmed with Crocidolite, which offers various shades of brown and red. This marble has an unusual texture. In some pieces, its color and faintly perceptible vein give it the casual appearance of a finely grained wood. Its geological structure closely resembles onyx, which fact accounts for the beautiful translucency of its crystal formation. The combination of these two marbles has created a beauty seldom seen in a building used for non-civic purposes.

The main elevator lobby has a marble floor in an interesting pattern of several colors. Theatre floor coverings include carpeting by Mohawk. The walls have been done in a striking color array of yellow, black and silver. For the main walls, yellow Siena marble was used with a trim of Italian Grand Antique. The mail and package boxes, lighting fixtures and elevator doors are done in ornamental white metal which has the appearance of silver. The elevator cabs are done in American black walnut panels with white metal dividing strips and ventilating grilles. The yellow Siena marble—also an Italian import—contains variations of color from pale yellow to gold and even deep red yellows, and the Italian Grand Antique is a vivid black streaked with white veins.

The auditorium, like the entire building and theatre portion, is of modernistic style. Instead of being severe in decorative treatment, however, it is quite ornate, but in a more rugged manner than is usually the case with highly decorated theatres. Dominant lines are vertical, effected through a succession of narrow panels, which reach to a cornice of spear-like motifs pointing downward. The central ceiling motif is a shallow recess, coved all around for lighting. Secondary floral features radiate out from this recess, ending in small coves.

The building is reported to have cost $1,500,000 and is a landmark in the Wilshire Western Uptown district.

Upper view: The forward section of the auditorium as seen from the lower left corner of the balcony, emphasizing the ceiling treatment and cove lighting arrangement.

Lower view: A corner of the lounge, designed in an esentially plain but warm-toned pattern following gently curving walls, relying mainly on furnishings for luxury.

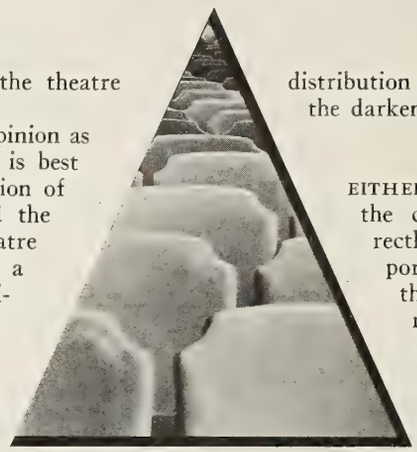
MODERN SEATING AND CHAIR MAINTENANCE

II.—Theatre Chair Construction

By REUBEN A. NYHAGEN

THERE ARE two outstanding viewpoints that govern in the sale of every order for theatre chairs. One is that of the manufacturer or distributor solely concerned with finding an outlet for his merchandise. The other is that of the exhibitor or consumer whose interest lies not so much in the material thing purchased as in the service that he can expect from it. These two viewpoints must be brought into focus in order to make a complete picture.

Out of hundreds of styles and many makes of theatre chairs built in the last quarter of a century, those which have survived to be the basis of big industries are those either supported with competent service systems, or built to withstand the rigors to which they are daily subjected. It is obviously in the light of what service can be expected of this product that we consider the various parts that go into the assembly of this modern theatre chair.



Chair Standards

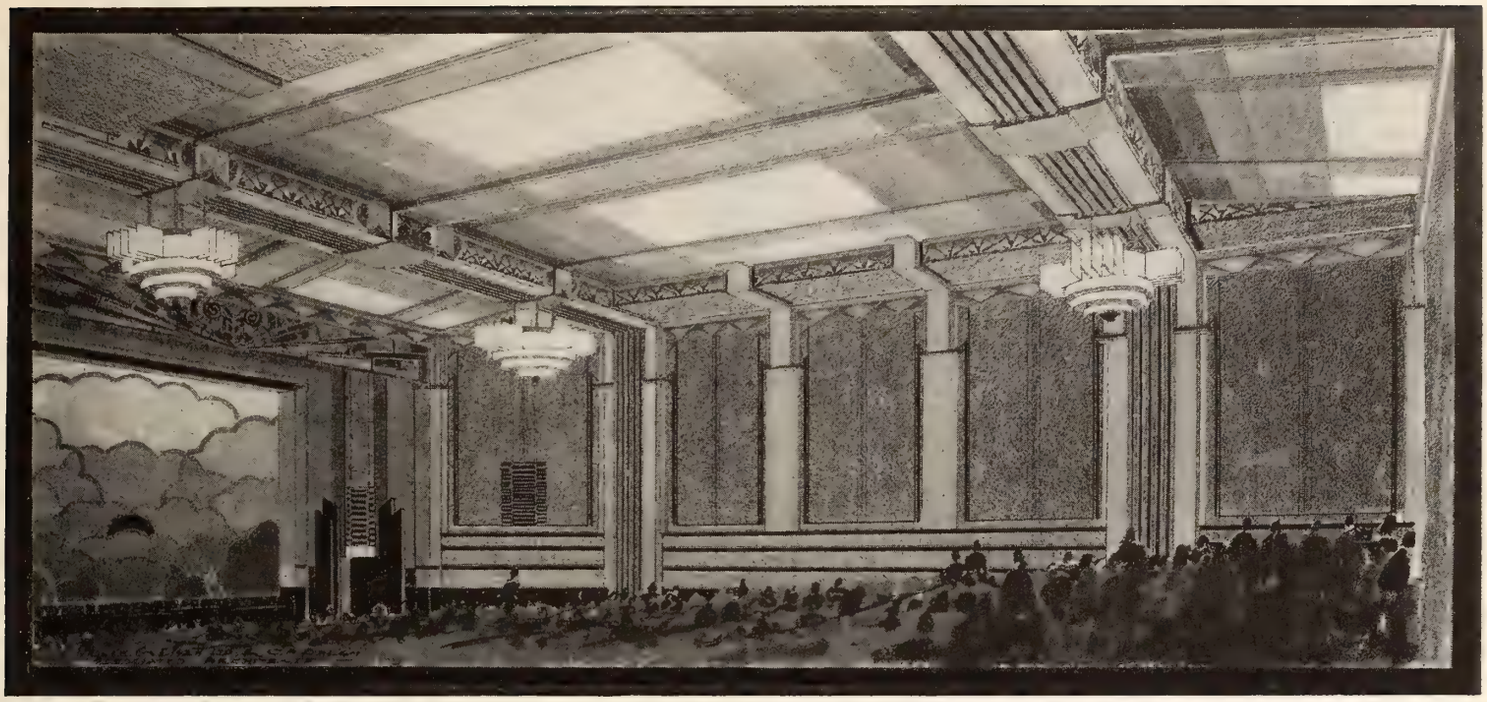
The supporting members of all theatre chairs are the metal uprights or standards to which all other parts in the chair assembly are directly or indirectly secured. These standards are designated right, left or center, which position is determined by an occupant sitting in a chair. While the material used in their construction and the design are the important factors, it is not uncommon that the first impression gained by a prospective purchaser is that all chairs are constructed with right and left decorated aisle standards.

In a demonstration samples of theatre chairs are presented in this form simply as a matter of convenience in order to display different designs and styles of aisle standards. In reality however the center standards of all theatre seating, which are not generally shown, and which are a skeleton of the solid and massive aisle standards, constitute the major support of all chairs in the theatre, except those along the aisles and open areas. The selection of design and the construction of the center standards is best left to the specialized intelligence and practical judgment of the manufacturer, since they must be built to the general perspective of the aisle standards and to their respective position on the theatre floor.

In this, the second of a series of six articles, the author prepares the theatre owner, manager and buyer for future discussions of chair selection, installation and also maintenance

There is diversified opinion as to what kind of metal is best suited for the construction of all chair standards and the mechanical parts of theatre chairs. Stability, with a certain amount of flexibility, is required in the general assembly of a theatre chair, but flexibility can be obtained in the production of the other working parts of the chair. Since the standards are the main supports of the chairs and should be rigid and securely fastened in their relative positions in the theatre, cast metal is most generally used for this purpose, for not only does this obtain the required rigidity, but cast metal also makes it possible to produce attractive ornamentations on the aisle standards. Steel of proper gauge is also used in the construction of standards, but exaggerations are sometimes indulged in to show an advantage of steel over cast metal. Regardless of the metal used in construction, the front and rear foot of all standards should be properly shaped and be of a metal capable of insuring that the chair will be securely held to the floor at all times with all certainty possible.

The selection of the design of the aisle standards is governed either by the general architecture and decorative style of the auditorium, or simply by individual taste. It is not infrequent that an architect will desire to carry out some particular emblem or design that may be a conspicuous factor in the general decorative scheme of the building, and this can be accomplished in cast metal aisle standards. The producers of theatre chairs have spent thousands of dollars in the preparation of standard designs that are in keeping with period architecture, and generally from such designs submitted, a very attractive and appropriate selection can be made. The wider, massive aisle standards seem to predominate in the modern types of seating with the added facilities of aisle lights for distribution at proper intervals along the darkened aisles.



Seat Hinges

EITHER ATTACHED directly to the chair standards, or indirectly through an added support or extension of metal, the seat hinge is one of the most important units of the modern theatre chair. The construction of seat hinges varies with each manufacturer, but formerly the most commonly used type was known as the direct, or friction, type. A hinge of this style was variously known and described as "ball and socket" hinge, "friction hinge," or "direct hinge." The "ball and socket" term is derived from the peculiar shape of its operating parts, whereas the term "friction hinge" was derived from the fact that the cushioning, or noiseless, effect is dependent upon the friction or pinch obtained by bolting it to the chair standards. From its very nature, a friction hinge, regardless of by whom produced, is likely in time to become noisy. "Friction" indicates the rubbing together of two surfaces not entirely smooth, and this rubbing together will in time polish the parts and reduce the friction. The only remedy to the development of this condition is the continual tightening up of the assembly parts of the hinge.

The raising or lowering of the seat of a chair must be accomplished as silently as possible and with the least amount of effort. We now reach the one mechanical operation of theatre chairs that has caused the manufacturers to give to this factor their best efforts and study, and which subject becomes a major topic in the demonstration of the modern theatre chair.

There are many different styles of seat hinges produced, but the majority of opinion, I have found, seem to favor a hinge of the ball bearing type. It is only logical to presume that if properly constructed, ball bearings, operating in specific raceways, would produce the highest degree of perfection in the movement of mechanical parts. The theory has been definitely proved in this product, as well as in others where the practical operation of mechanical parts is required. In like fashion, factory research and experiments have produced cushioning in seat hinges, resulting in the

A GROUP OF SMALL THEATRES

Describing the features characterizing 13 United Artists theatres now under way in California, with architects' drawings of floor plans and designs typical of the entire group

THE MOTIVATING idea of the United Artists program for the construction of 13 motion picture theatres in California is to create a small cinema with as much comfort and intimacy as possible. The group, projected about a year ago and now under way with plans by Walker & Eisen, Ltd., and designs by C. A. Balch, associate architect, will have seating capacities per house ranging from 850 to 1,700—although the latter number of seats is the only one greater than 1,200. The average capacity for the group is approximately 1,000 seats. The project represents a total building investment of $1,154,000, including in several instances the cost of air conditioning and stores.

Specifically, the theatres to form the group, with their seating capacities and costs, are as follows:

San Jose	1,200 seats	$100,000.00
Pasadena	950 seats	70,000.00
Inglewood	950 seats	56,000.00
Beverly Hills	900 seats	65,000.00
El Centro	1,200 seats	130,000.00*
Palo Alto	916 seats	63,000.00
Los Angeles (Whittier & Woods)	916 seats	57,500.00
Los Angeles (Wilshire & Mansfield)	900 seats	89,000.00
Long Beach	1,200 seats	115,000.00
Richmond	1,000 seats	68,500.00
Berkeley	1,700 seats	200,000.00
Vallejo	850 seats	59,000.00
Ventura	960 seats	81,000.00

* including air conditioning
 including stores

All of the houses are of similar pattern, yet achieve considerable detailed variety of design and layout. An effort has been made to "trade-mark" the group as United Artists houses, using as part of the decorative scheme symbolical elements, such as plaques, expressing the ideas of Unity and Artistry.

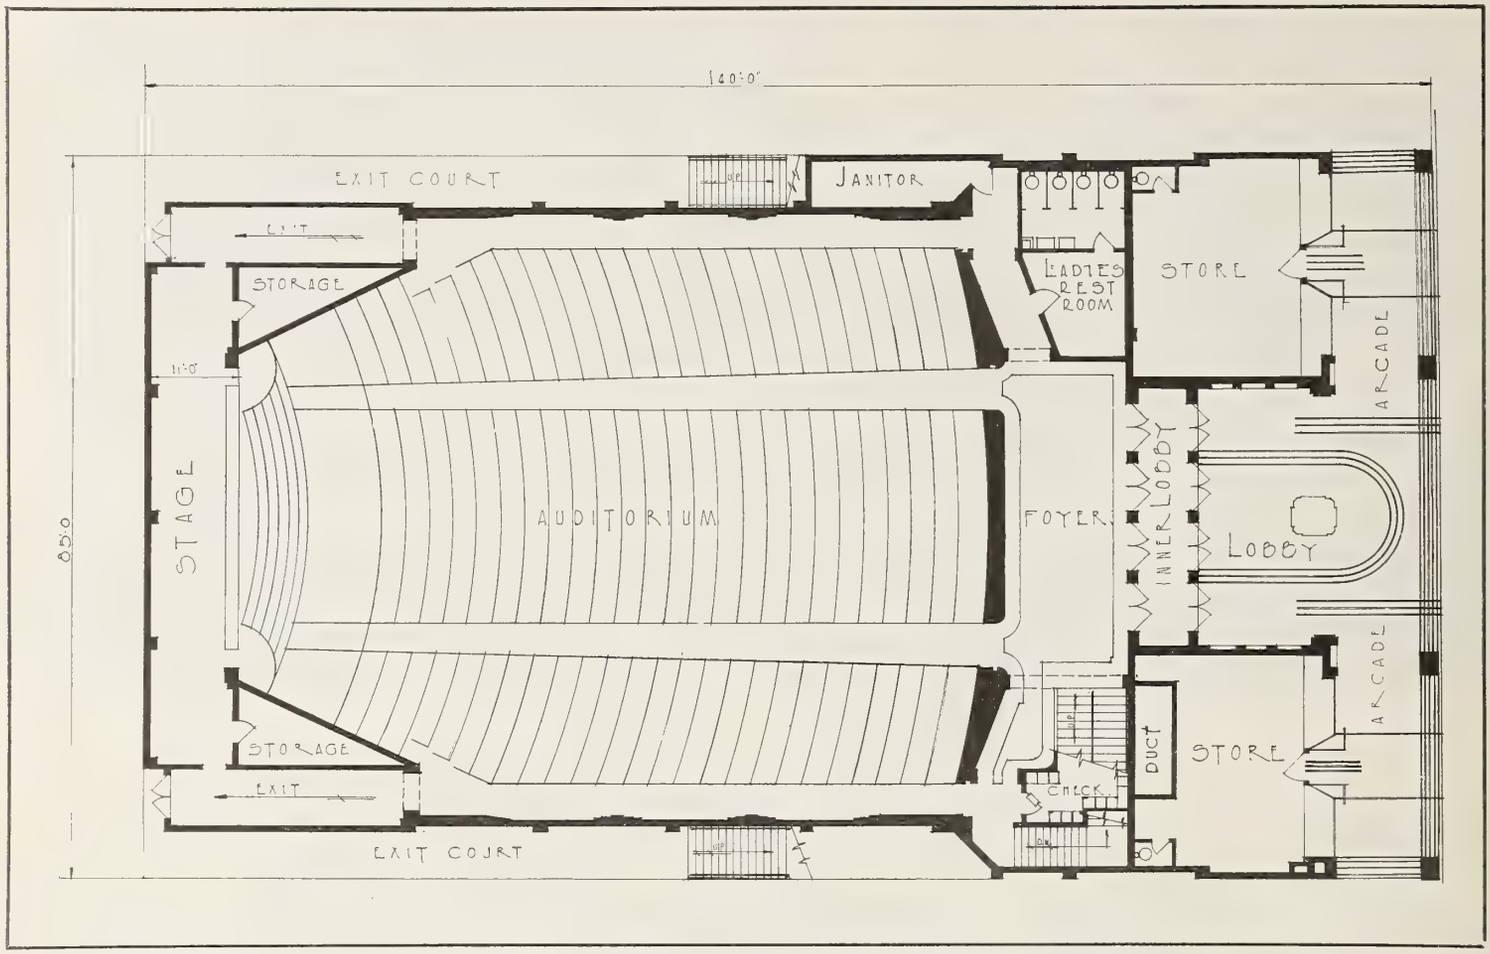
The central motif for all the exteriors is practically the same. The vertical sign becomes part of each building and not just an appendage to the facade. By this and other characteristics of the same inspiration, and also by the symbols used as decorative motifs at the facade, it is intended to have the group, athough located in many different communities, easily recognizable as a United Artists house.

Exterior construction is entirely of reinforced concrete, even to the street facade, where the ornament has been cast monolithically with the plain surfaces.

As a finish material was used a light buff cement wash over the concrete. In order to secure a smooth surface on the concrete, all the form work was lined with three-ply veneered wood. The application of the thin coat of cement wash on the surface gives a very smooth and pleasing appearance. A slight departure was made in the vertical sign, which in this case has the appearance of actually being a part of the structure, and the background of the sign is painted the same color as the face of the building. In this manner the sign has the appearance of being built of the same material as the facade.

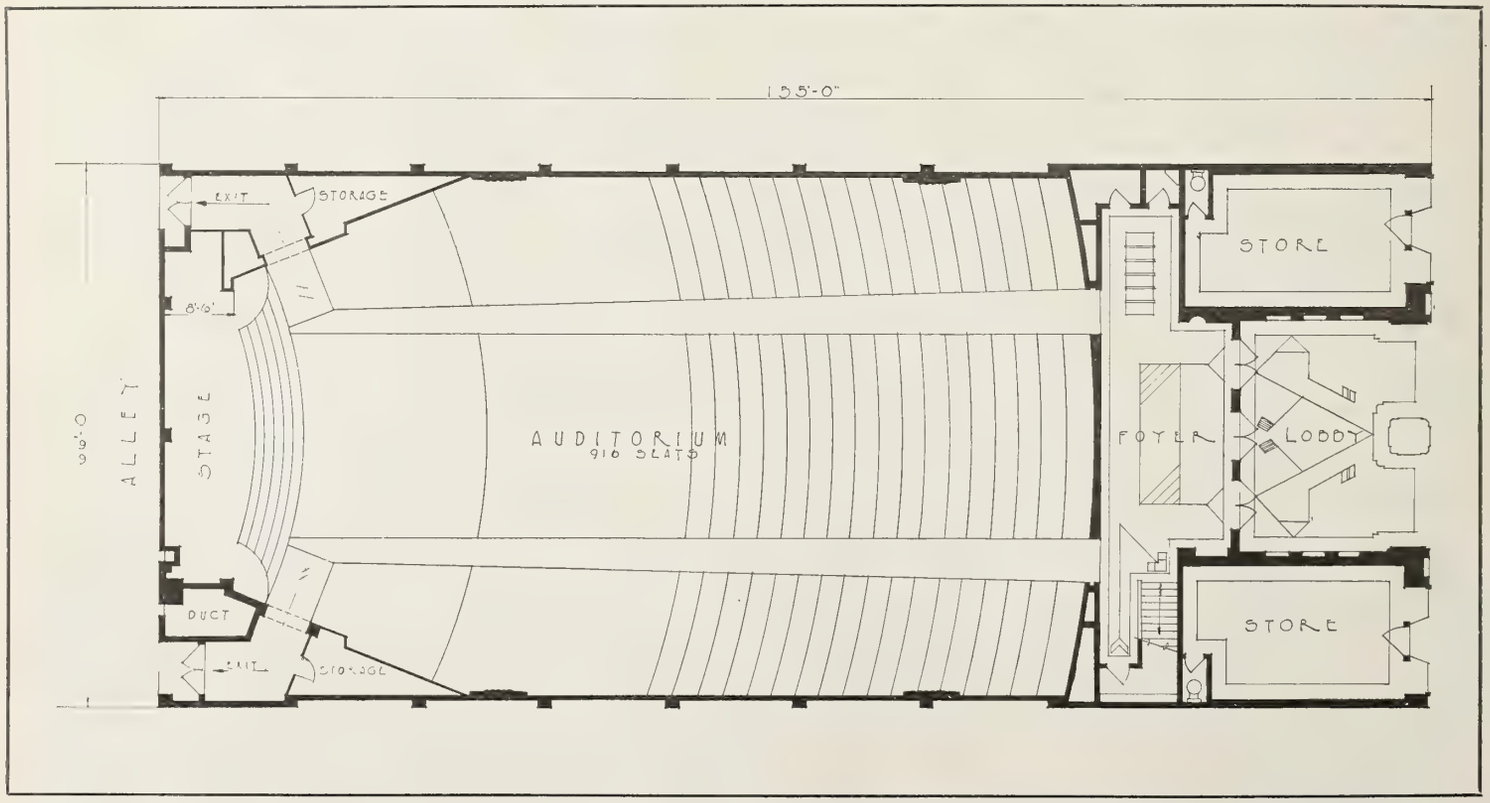
The sidewalks in the front of the theatre have been colored with an integral color, and a modernistic design has been cut with a carborundum wheel, which produces an effect less homely than the ordinary marking of the cement finisher's tool.

The ceiling of the marquee is carried at the same level straight through to the entrance doors, and 10-watt bulbs are placed about five inches on centers in a geometric design over the whole surface of the ceiling.



All poster panels are of the same size, 30x40 inches, inside dimensions. These dimensions were chosen because of the fact that the standard poster sheet size is 30x40 inches, and posters can be interchangeable and fit any theatre.

The foyers are generally simply treated, depending largely on modernistic illumination in the form of flush panel lighting in the ceiling, and column lighting in the room corners to take the place of cast plaster decorating.



The auditoriums are illuminated by four main ceiling fixtures in modernistic design. An acoustical analysis was made of each auditorium, and the amount of acoustic treatment necessary was determined before any plastering was done.

[Plans follow on the next three pages.]

THE NEW FOX BAKERSFIELD

THE NEW Fox theatre in Bakersfield, Cal., is located two blocks off the main business intersection. Prominence was given the building by means of an advertising tower, which may be seen for blocks in all directions. The building covers an area of 122x175 feet, and besides the 1,700-seat theatre, houses several shops, which serve not only to bring additional patronage to this center but to lend interest to theatregoers. S. Charles Lee was the architect.

The building is of reinforced concrete and steel construction, with exterior stucco finish and tile roofing, two paramount characteristics of exterior Spanish architecture, embodied in this addition to the Fox chain. The site is a corner giving access to the theatre entrance from two streets, with the box office prominent in the outside corner. Bulletin frames blend into the Spanish theme, instead of presenting the oft-seen billboard appearance.

The foyer is characterized by a reserve not often seen in this type of house, there being little ornamentation, either in architectural treatment or in furnishings. Gorgeous painted tapestries at either end of the foyer are the centers of interest, the one picturing an early historical event of moment in California history, the other being a replica of an early California map.

Richly carpeted stairs lead from the foyer to the balcony, the structure of which balcony has afforded an interesting ceiling treatment to the foyer, the ceiling being inclined following the balcony structure, with massive beams enhancing the Spanish effect. From the foyer stairs the patron may look through an opening and view the ventilating equipment—an effort to exploit the air conditioning facilities.

The auditorium is essentially atmospheric in design and decoration. The hot glare of the desert sun without is smoothed to the soft light of a summer moon by means of indirect lighting enhanced by star effects in the theatre ceiling. The walls terminate, skyward, with domestic Spanish skylines done in plaster to resemble textured walls, tiled roofs, grilled windows and balconies, and other characteristic and romantic features of the Spanish horizon.

Acoustic plaster, which in this case lent itself well to the decorative scheme, has been used in this auditorium. The screen is of "grandeur" proportions, necessitating a large and imposing proscenium arch.

Full stage equipment has been provided to accommodate stage productions. A commodious suite of stage dressing rooms are located above the store buildings.

Upper view: General view of the exterior, a harmonious composition of masses dominated by a quadrangular tower. The building is of reinforced concrete and steel with stucco finish.

LATE COURT RULINGS INVOLVING THEATRES

By LEO T. PARKER

CONSIDERABLE discussion has arisen from time to time whether a theatre owner may be liable in damages for exhibiting in his theatre a copyrighted motion picture film without license or proper authority from the owner of the copyright. Therefore, it is important to know that a United States court in the late case of Tiffany Productions vs. Dewing (50 F. [2d] 911) held in the affirmative.

"BICYCLING" AS COPYRIGHT INFRINGEMENT

The facts of this case are that Tiffany Productions, Inc., Columbia Pictures Corporation, Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., and RKO Productions, Inc., hereinafter referred to as distributors, are owners and distributors of many copyrighted motion pictures. A certain theatre operator owned and operated a theatre in Greensboro, Md., and, also, one in Centreville, Md. At the theatre in Greensboro, a number of the distributors' copyrighted motion pictures were exhibited without a license, the films having come into the theatre owner's hands pursuant to a contract made with one of the distributors which permitted only limited exhibitions of the films at the theatre in Centreville; vice versa, a picture of one of the distributors (RKO) delivered to the theatre in Greensboro under a license contract for a single day's exhibition at that theatre alone, was exhibited by the theatre owner at the theatre in Centreville. This practice of exhibiting motion pictures at times or places prohibited by the license agreement is commonly known in the industry as holding over, or "bicycling."

The distributors filed suit against the theatre owner for infringement of its copyrights on the films which were exhibited without proper authority. Therefore, the questions presented the United States court were as follows:

First, is a theatre owner liable for unlicensed exhibition of copyrighted motion pictures? Second, assuming that the distributors are entitled to damages, can the court grant them the right to take the minimum statutory damages of $250 for each infringement in lieu of actual damages, or may the court award nominal damages for each infringement as the actual damages sustained?

In holding the theatre owner liable for infringement, the court stated the following important law:

"The Copyright Act confers two monopolies—that of making copies and that of giving public performances for profit. . . . Unless the number of infringing performances of a copyrighted composition exceeds 25, the minimum allowance of $250 damages must be made. Where more than 25 infringing performances are proved, and there is no showing as to actual loss, the court must allow the statutory minimum, and may, in its sound discretion, employ the scheduled $10 a performance as a basis for assessing additional damages. . . . Accordingly, the damages will be so decreed in favor of the plaintiffs (distributors) against the defendant (theatre owner) . . . in addition to an injunction as prayed, and also costs and an attorneys' fee in the aggregate sum for all four suits of $1,000."

LEGAL RIGHTS OF UNIONS

WHILE IT IS true that a trade union may be liable in damages, and a court may render an injunction preventing certain acts on the part of the members of trade unions, yet it is well established law that peaceful persuasion to induce the public not to patronize certain theatres is universally recognized as a lawful method, and such peaceful persuasion may be addressed to patrons and customers as well as employes.

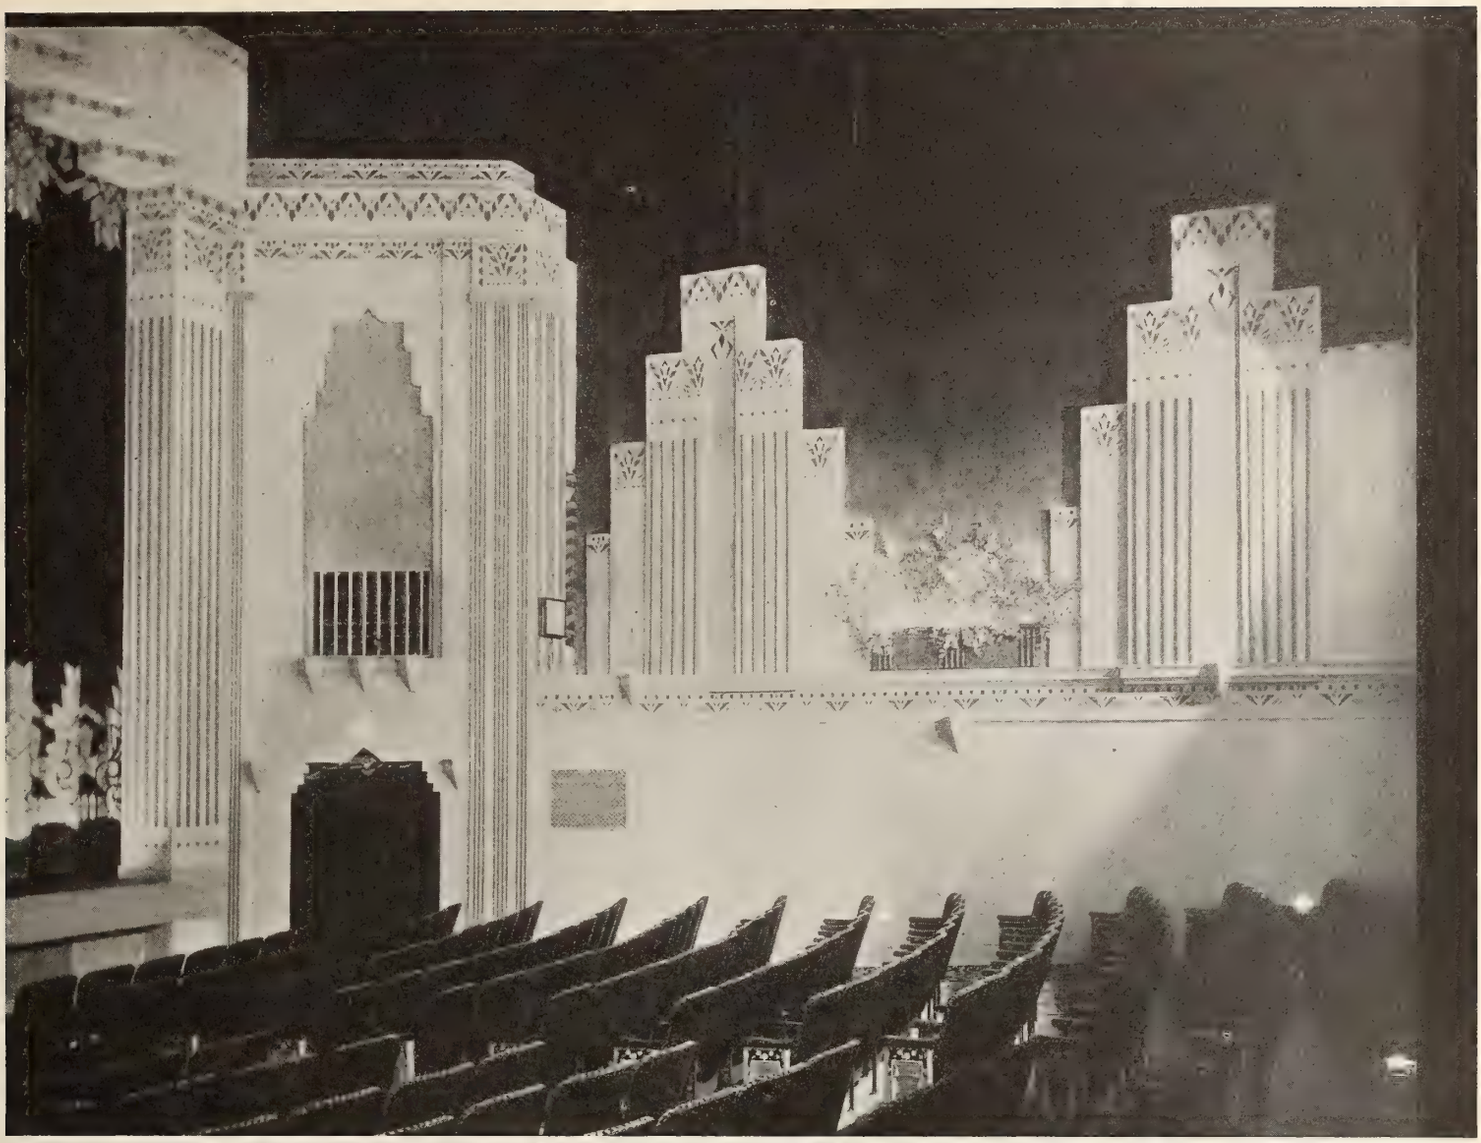
On the other hand, if the limits of peaceful persuasion are over-stepped and the element of coercion or threat enters into the case, the entire course of conduct of the union members becomes unlawful. This is true whether coercion consists of actual violence, threats of violence, intimidation, or of economic coercion such as the withdrawal of patronage from or refusal to deal with persons who patronize the employer. Of course, the threats need not be plainly evident to make conduct unlawful, and intimidation may be and frequently is accomplished by the mere presence of numbers of union members, by demeanor and acts and without a spoken word.

The mere fact, however, that members of the trade union request patrons and the general public not to patronize a particular theatre, generally is not a legal ground for the owner of the theatre to obtain an injunction against members of the union.

For instance, in the late case of United Chain Theatres vs. Philadelphia Moving Picture Machine Operators Union, (50 F. [2d] 189), it was shown that a discussion arose between a theatre owner and its moving picture operator. The theatre owner refused to employ a union operator and the union began a series af acts which consisted of three general classes and were as follows:

(A) Sending of postal cards enclosed in envelopes to a very large number of patrons living in the general neighborhood of the theatre. These postals varied somewhat in language but in general notified the recipient that the theatre owner did not employ union operators and did not pay "regular wages" or "an American living wage." Some of the postals closed with a request for "support" or for "moral support," while others asked the recipient to help in the fight against the theatre by "patronizing other theatres which give the working men a square deal." (B) Driving in the neighborhood of the theatre a "music wagon" bearing large printed signs and placards containing messages similar to those appearing on the postal cards. (C) Employing men to walk up and down in front of the theatre, bearing printed signs hung on their shoulders, examples of which signs are, "Nixon's Grand is unfair to organized labor," "Nixon's Grand refuses to employ union moving picture operators, members of the A. F. of L., at American living wages," "Nixon's Grand no longer employs union moving picture operators, members of A. F. of L." "Nixon's Grand locked out union moving picture operators, members of A. F. of L."

The theatre owner filed suit and asked the court to grant an injunction against such practice by members of the union. It is interesting to observe that the higher court refused the injunction, and said:



"None of the messages conveyed by any of the above mentioned means to the patrons of the plaintiff's theatre contain any threat of injury or inconvenience of any kind to persons who patronize the theatre, nor do they contain any matter which is abusive or libelous. . . . In general, the picketing has been carried out without physical violence and without any threat, menace, insult, or annoyance to patrons of the theatre."

ASSUMPTION OF CONTRACT

IT IS WELL settled law that a court may imply a valid contract, although no direct proof is given showing that the party denying obligation on the contract has agreed to assume such obligation. This law is effective with respect to all contracts, despite their nature.

For example, in the recent case of Great

AN 800-SEAT THEATRE COSTING $50,000

The interesting Okla theatre, a new Hughes-Franklin house erected in McAlester, Okla., here described by the architect who designed and planned it

By W. SCOTT DUNNE

THE OKLA THEATRE, recently opened in McAlester, Okla., is one of the new and rapidly growing group of motion picture theatres operated by the Hughes-Franklin circuit on the Pacific coast and in the Southwest. Although erected on the site of a former theatre and using a portion of the old building, it is really a new structure.

In this project we were faced with the problem of providing an up-to-date fireproof theatre at a moderate price on the site of a former theatre that had been destroyed by fire. The site is an inside lot of 50x100 feet facing the street, with railroad right-of-way at rear. The old party walls were retained and stiffened with new steel columns carrying the theatre structure, including a new first floor over a basement that is utilized for transformer vault, heating plant, dead storage rooms, and other similar purposes.

To secure the necessary seating, a sound platform was adopted in lieu of a full stage due to the shallowness of the site, and a maximum of comfortable seats was obtained, with roomy circulation and public spaces embracing a lobby, foyer and standee space on the lower floor, and ample lounges, rest rooms, toilets, and theatre offices on the mezzanine floor with circulation to the balcony through lounges direct from the foyer. There are two shops adjoining the lobby.

The spirit of the whole design is in response to a desire for a feeling of roomy comfort within limited spaces, and was happily obtained by avoiding unnecessary elaboration and expressing more in form than in small motifs and fine detail. Ornamental effects are done in highly colored raised stenciling and indirect colored lighting. Thought was given to economy of illumination and co-ordination of lighting scheme and decorations, with resort to pockets for illumination in preference to strip lighting with the consequent continual maintenance of lamping and current. The results were satisfactory from both viewpoints. In fact, a major factor in this project was to develop an economical and efficient theatre for a moderate-sized city and still not lose the elaborate atmosphere of the larger theatre.

In style, the Okla is modified-moderne, with a semi-atmospheric auditorium carried out in a harmony of high coloring extending through carpeting, seating, draperies and furnishings.

The seating capacity is 800, with 600 on the lower floor and the balance in a balcony. The stage is draped with a complete sound set and front and screen curtains, operated from the projection room.

This house is fully sound-treated with accoustical plaster in stained effects.

The heating and cooling system employs gas-blast and air washers through slow-speed, large-capacity fans with necessary air returns and exhausts. These systems and tage et and draperie were installed by the Hughes-Franklin maintenance department.

The construction throughout is fireproof in a combination of steel and reinforced concrete, and the entire cost, excluding theatre equipment, was within $50,000.

The Okla theatre was built for R. & R. Theatres, but during construction the house was purchased by Hughes-Franklin Theatres.

Building a theatre of the general type sought without going above such an amount calls for careful planning, always hewing to the essentials, yet remembering that some degree of elegance is expected by the public. This requires judicious selection of materials, for it is very easy to shoot costs up without really attaining much more to "sell" the public than one would have at a considerably lower figure. One can usually also find points in the structural methods at which saving can be effected.

WHAT THE MANAGER SHOULD KNOW ABOUT SOUND

ECONOMICAL PURCHASING

By AARON NADELL

With this, the ninth article, the series is concluded. It began in the May 9th issue, as an attempt to give practical instruction to the theatre manager, as well as to projectionists and sound engineers, in sound technics, equipment and supplies, with special consideration of those factors which operate importantly in making purchases for the projection room and allied departments of the theatre.

WHEN SOUND first came to the theatre, price was often no object. The urgency of obtaining the new equipment upon any terms in many theatres overrode all other considerations. Expense was a secondary matter.

Sound once installed, the new sound show, like the older shows, had to go on. Service engineers, no less than projectionists, still had most of their experience before them, while practical operation of the new equipment soon revealed that even the best types of it had many faults never realized in the laboratory. Maintaining the show, and correction of some of its early crudeness, then became the vital factors in sound operation. Expense remained the background.

If questions of cost are in the foreground today, that fact is to be regarded as a natural and inevitable stage in the evolution of sound operation, altogether apart from any other, outside influence that may accidentally have been brought to bear at the same time because of external business conditions. The economic pressure had hitherto been masked by the exigency of the technical pressure. The latter, happily, has been somewhat lessened by engineering progress, so that the economic problem is now as prominent as it once was obscured.

The problems of wise and economical purchasing have already been encountered by every exhibitor in the most various fields, ranging from seats and carpets to ventilating systems and advertising. The exhibitor is thoroughly familiar with the conventional business factors of those problems: the pros and cons of price versus quality, reputation of manufacturer, advantage of standard advertised brands, and all the rest. The exhibitor also knows that in every separate field in which he is required to decide upon purchases, there are special, detailed factors that either modify the customary general considerations, or are not covered by them at all. Such special angles, he is well aware, require some degree of special understanding before an adequate approach can be made to them, and in consequence he has been forced to take many hours from his devotion to the theatre business in order to study the carpet business, the painting business, and what-not.

Sound equipment certainly would be amazing merchandise if the general factors that the manager weighs in all his varied purchasing did not apply to it as they do to any other product, or if the business training and commercial judgment of the manager were of less value in evaluating sound equipment than they are in dealing with the special factors of any other product. That such special factors complicate the purchase of sound apparatus as they do the purchase of anything else, means no more than that in the long run the theatre manager will have added one more item to his already remarkable list of accomplishments.

A brief review of some of the more important of the detailed factors applying to sound equipment may perhaps be helpful in its present stage of the development, and should constitute an appropriate conclusion to this series.

I

General Considerations

Price Versus Quality

(A) THE THEATRE sells only illusion: a manufacturer sells tangible and substantial merchandise. If the processes of manufacture are interrupted they can very often be resumed with little or no damage to the partly fabricated product. Manufacturers have not always realized that if the illusion of the theatre is destroyed by interruption in the functioning of machinery, or by any visible or audible intrusion of machinery at all, the theatre's only product has been ruined and the customers cancel the sale and demand their money back. It is the manager who has been educating the manufacturer on this point, and who will continue to do so, but meanwhile, and until the process of that education has been wholly completed, it is the manager, rather than the best-intentioned manufacturer, who must add the extra ounce of precaution necessary for safeguarding the show.

(B) No man would risk damaging his car by addition of a cheap accessory. The sound installation, for all its diversified parts, is largely one integrated system, in which failure of some inexpensive item can damage or ruin other apparatus costing a hundred times as much.

There are two reasons—there are others—why the universal problem of price versus quality assumes a special significance in connection with the purchase of sound machinery.

Competition of Manufacturers

The "reputable" versus the "bargain" product independently of quality, the established against the adventurous, the new as opposed to the old—is another of the familiar problems of good buying that must be reviewed anew when it is applied to sound. The electrical manufacturing industry has some peculiarities that are of the utmost importance in this connection.

Electrical apparatus is commonly not a unit, but a composite of small units. Few manufacturers of the composites—such as amplifiers for example — make all their own parts. They will usually buy some or all of them from other manufacturers. Not infrequently the parts makers will expand into the production of composites; and the opposite progression is also common. The individual parts are usually light and simple things, and the equipment needed for their manufacture is seldom so elaborate as to prevent a maker of door-bells, for example, from expanding to the manufacture of sound relays, or to hinder a resistance company that desires to add a side-line of faders.

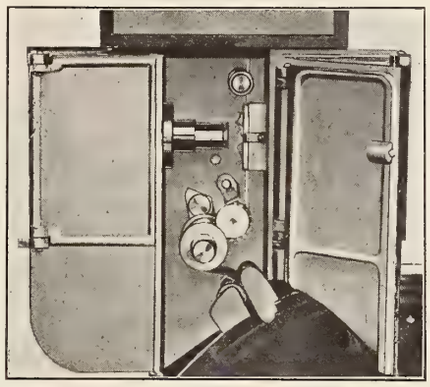
Some of the dangers of compromising on the quality of sound equipment have already been outlined. Wherever the repute of the manufacturer has any great bearing upon the purchaser's opinion of the reliability of the article, the exceptional flexibility of electrical manufacture complicates the normal problem of offering a discreet encouragement to "healthy" competition without taking undue risks on merchandise of unknown quality. No general formula for dealing with that problem can be laid down in a market so complicated. Each separate item of sound equipment may at any time become an individual and distinctive problem, to be settled only according to the particular facts applying to its own case and not others.

Such being the circumstances, unavoidable and wide-spread, it seems evident that the reputation and past experience of competing makers will in not a few cases prove less conclusive than competent and disinterested technical appraisal of the product in question. Technical assistance of this nature is more easily available to the exhibitor than he sometimes realizes—a point to be discussed at greater length below.

Advertised Brands



The theory of advertising as commonly advanced runs somewhat to the effect that a manufacturer who standardizes his name and product by consistent and continuous publicity cannot afford to sell an inferior article. This theory asserts that advertisements do little more than persuade the purchaser to try the merchandise. If dissatisfaction results, the "word-of-mouth" campaign is enabled to standardize the name and product with equal effectiveness, and each successive advertisement merely gives new occasion for unfavorable comment.

Whatever the truth of that theory, practical theatre people, deeply versed in their own promotion methods, will tend to accept or reject or modify it in accordance with their experience with their own public.

However, it is evident that the operation of any such theory cannot apply with similar effect to all advertised products. Untrue claims of the purity of cigarettes or breakfast foods does not often harm the unethical advertiser—the public does not conduct chemical analyses. On the other hand, exaggerated statements as to the durability or performance of an automobile can sometimes damage or even ruin the manufacturer. Theatre advertising is in still another category. The public knows what it wants in entertainment. It may know little or nothing of the technique of acting or directing, it may have only the haziest notions of what constitutes a "story"—but it knows what it likes.

The manager may feel that advertising of sound equipment bears the same relation to himself that advertising of pictures bears to his public,—namely, he may consider that he is neither versed nor interested in the technical qualities of such equipment, but only in how it performs. He may reflect, therefore, that sound equipment advertising is exactly the same thing as picture ballyhoo. He will be wrong: that reflection does not withstand analysis.

Every time a theatre changes its program it manufacturers a new and different product. For this reason the show business —which is concerned chiefly with grosses, and cares little for average nets—will not harm itself permanently by occasionally overplaying a weak sister. The audience makes up its mind as to whether or not it has received its money's worth within an hour and a half after it has paid the money in. But the manager who buys sound equipment may not be able to form a corresponding opinion until after a year and a half. The electrical manufacturer who makes an exaggerated claim for his equipment is therefore in precisely the same position as the theatre that for a year and a half has played nothing but flops, and advertised every one of them as hits. He has accumulated "error" over a long period and has permanently impaired his standing to a point where only conversion to new management can save him at all. His advertising therefore is obviously in a class with automobile advertising: he must not claim too much.

The peculiar flexibility of electrical manufacturing, previously discussed, does to some extent modify this conclusion. An occasional manufacturer may be quite satisfied to turn a quick profit in the theatre field and then divert his efforts to other pastures. An automobile factory cannot be converted to other uses quite so readily.

Except for that limitation, extensive advertising on the part of an electrical manufacturer seems clearly entitled to be regarded as an investment no company could afford to make if its product were unequal to its claims. Consistency in advertising, moreover, is an indication that the company in question intends to remain interested in theatre business, and has a second important bearing upon the trustworthiness of advertised sound equipment.

Guaranteed

The guarantee is an important part of any purchasing that becomes especially valuable in connection with the buying of so complicated and highly technical a product as sound apparatus. The guarantee, of course, is worth exactly as much as the guarantor. The special qualities that the guarantee takes on in connection with some purchases are two-fold.

Warranty that an imperfect article will be replaced without cost, or some similar arrangement, is of little help to the theatre whose show has been stopped for half-a-day. The exhibitor cannot always use the guarantee as a protection against his losses. Often he can use it only as indication of the good faith of the manufacturer. If the latter stands to lose also, if his equipment proves faulty, the manager can naturally assume that he is getting the best that particular maker is able to give. In very many cases—although not in all—this will be all a guarantee can mean to the exhibitor.

On the other hand, the relatively unfamiliar nature of sound equipment and the difficulty and expense that will often be involved in any attempt to secure a complete technical appraisal, enhances the value of the guarantee within those natural limitations. Used with caution at its proper worth, the maker's warranty often must actually remain an indispensable adjunct to wise purchasing of sound apparatus.

II

Technical Considerations

THERE ARE always many technical qualities of any sound equipment that the manager can evaluate for himself. There are others upon which he can obtain assistance. Such assistance is available in many forms.

Laboratory Tests

Testing laboratories will, for a fee, report upon any product. The fees are usually too high for the purchaser. Such tests are intended primarily for the manufacturer, who spreads their costs over the whole quantity of his production. In exceptional cases, however, theatres and theatre chains will find such laboratory checks worthwhile. This will be true where the same standard article is to be purchased repeatedly—as in the case of tubes, for example—or where prices vary so widely that it may be worth while to gamble the cost of testing a lower-priced article.

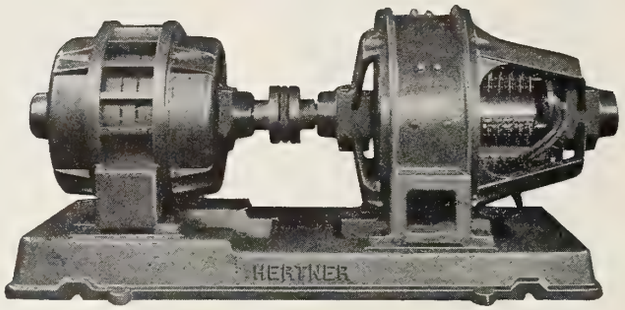
Theatre Tests

Apparatus offered to the manager can very often be obtained on trial and installed in theatre for test. Such tests reveal the performance of the articles at once, but naturally must be protracted over a considerable period of time if they are to reveal its durability. Where the article being tested is only a sample, as in the case of a tube, not one, but a number, should be checked and the results averaged. If this is done the manufacturer can thereafter be held responsible if future deliveries do not maintain the standard set by the samples, and staple quality is consequently assured.

The test of a tube, which has only to be inserted in the proper socket, is simple enough to be highly desirable. Some theatre tests are so expensive as to be almost prohibitive—this will be the case wherever re-wiring requirements or other heavy installation cost is encountered. Some are dangerous: a defective tube cannot stop a show for more than a few moments but it can ruin the amplifier in which it is used. On the other hand, a defective amplifier, or other major part, can stop the show for a long time if it proves unsatisfactory.

Theatre testing is therefore of great value, but it must be carried out with proper precautions in every case. A tube should be checked for internal short-circuit before it is ever placed in a socket, and

DUAL SECURITY. . .



TO safeguard the interests of its customers, National has set up two formidable sentinels . . . (1) Responsibility of the Manufacturer: Reputation for honest value in production; ability to make good all guarantees; disposition to satisfactorily adjust all justifiable complaints; financial standing and possibility of being in business permanently—all these factors are carefully checked prior to the completion of any distributing arrangements . . . (2) Reliability of Distributor: A policy of rigid insistence on four-square dealing between the National salesman and his customers; truthful selling; trustworthy service; financial capacity to carry through all contracts; nation-wide day and night service for steady maintenance and quick emergency repairs . . . What greater assurance of Customer Satisfaction than this can be offered?

Free Working Hinge Construction Insures Noiseless Operation

Silence is Golden! No other mechanical factor enters into the successful operation of theatres today, quite as much as silence. Elimination of distracting interference with good sound audition is imperative. In Steel Chairs, quietness is a predominant feature . . . no squeaking and squawking of hinges or harsh bumping noises of impact when seats are raised or lowered. Steel Chairs never grow noisy with age. Carefully constructed, snug-fitting, free-working seat hinges, guarantee permanently silent operation over a long period of years. Why not include this all-important feature as a definite requirement for the correct seating of your theatre? In selecting Steel Chairs you secure the utmost of Beauty, Comfort, Long Service and Silence.

similar considerations apply to the testing of any part that can even possibly damage another. A major piece of equipment should not be tested during the show, or left in use during the show in the course of a durability test, unless it is so connected through switches that the regular theatre set-up can be restored to operation at a moment's notice. Such connections add to the expense of installation, but they are unavoidable as insurance.

Competent Advice

Competent enough advice is always available to any manager—service or sales engineers will be glad to supply it. But adequate discussion of competing products can seldom be obtained from those sources. When it can, it is not to be trusted, because no good salesman or engineer will ever make free to point out all the defects of his competitor's offering; it is distinctly unethical to "knock" one's rivals. Therefore the manager who relies upon such guidance exclusively will hear the good points of every product, but the bad points of none. He needs better help than that.

(a) The Advice of the Projectionist

The projectionist is very often competent to offer the most valuable advice, and above all, his interest in the service the equipment gives is as great as that of the manager. His usefulness is limited only by the extent of his knowledge and experience, which in many cases will be adequate to cover all normal problems that may arise. It is only when the projectionist has reached the end of his rope that the manager normally needs look further.

(b) Engineering Advice

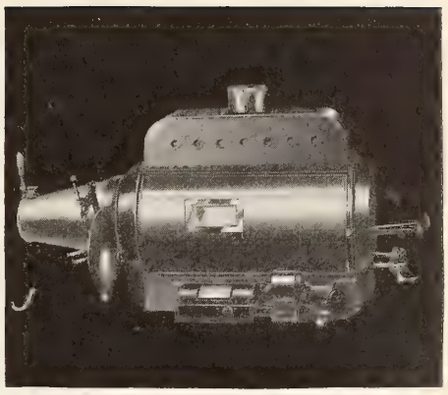
Theatre chains often find it profitable to engage the services of an experienced sound engineer to assist their decision in this, as in other matters. The service engineer can be useful and valuable in many ways, but it is by savings he may effect in purchases that he pays himself his own salary. Small chains and individual theatres within a limited area can sometimes arrange to share the services and cost of a competent technician.

The Manager's Judgment



There are many technical points upon which the manager himself can pass adequate judgment. They are those qualities of the equipment that can be seen on the surface or brought out by simple theatre tests. A few of the more important of these may be listed. Some need little more than to be named, others may reasonably call for some brief discussion.

(a) Good Workmanship

Workmanlike qualities are as easy to recognize as they are difficult to describe. It needs no great technical knowledge to appreciate a neat and careful job of any kind. The most trifling detail will reveal to any eye whether the maker has put thought and care into his design. It is of course obvious that good workmanship cannot be an infallible guide, because in any

Peerless Reflector Arc Lamps are the "Preferred Choice."

To be universally acknowledged the "one" indispensable requisite for perfect projection, requires more than the indiscriminate use of printer's ink. Such a position can only be earned by a product which is correct in principle, advanced in mechanical execution and has proven itself superior in actual service and performance.

The light producing reserve of Peerless Reflector Arc Lamps brings all projection requirements easily within their ability to do the job best, with greater economy, reduced up-keep cost and hence, greater purchaser's satisfaction.

line an inferior, careless product can be dressed up to look well. But as the opposite condition is less often encountered, the substantiality and neatness of the article still remain of considerable value as indications to its intrinsic quality.

(b) Accessibility of Parts

No piece of equipment can be adequately appraised without careful consideration of the ease with which it will lend itself to rapid repair. Even if that particular portion of the sound system were perfectly trouble-proof in itself, it might be damaged by failure of some apparatus. The ideal design, therefore, is one in which every component is instantly accessible—and can be repaired or replaced without loss of time or need of moving other parts out of the way. For similar reasons and necessity for special tools, although sometimes unavoidable, must always be regarded as a departure from that theoretical perfection in which apparatus can be completely dismantled and reassembled with nothing more than a screw-driver, a soldering iron and a pair of pliers.

(c) Trouble Indicators and Trouble Aids

Meters and indicating lamps are very valuable accessories. They help greatly in locating the source of an unknown trouble. Each of these types of indicators has its own special field—the meter gives exact information, but the lamp can be read from a distance. Sometimes both can be used to advantage. In an amplifier, for example, an ammeter may be used to indicate proper rheostat setting. Suppose a signal lamp beam be added to the same circuit, being placed across the line input (an ammeter, of course will be in series). Then if the meter alone fails to read, the break in the line will be found within the amplifier—most likely a burnt-out tube. On the other hand, if the lamp goes out also when the meter fails no time need be wasted in changing tubes—the trouble cannot be in the amplifier, and a blown fuse in the battery room is the next probability. Some of the most carefully built apparatus now on the market employ this principle extensively.

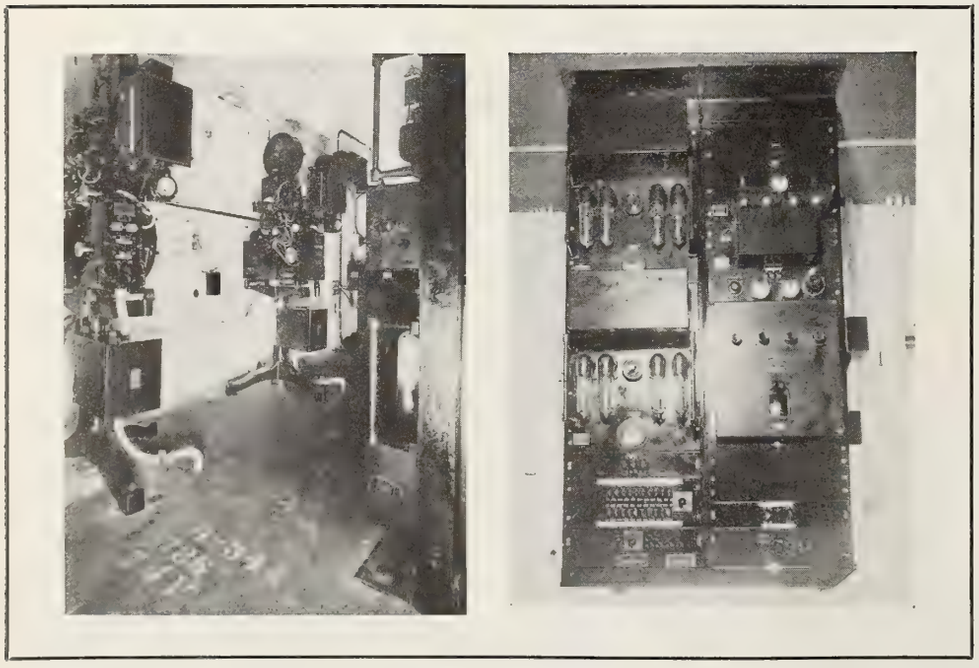
Switching arrangements, by means of which circuits can be successively isolated; jacks for inserting test-phones, accessibility of wiring terminals to meter or phone tests, are all-important in helping the "trouble shooter"—unless a fair proportion of those aids are present, he works under difficulties and may be greatly delayed in finding his trouble.

Complete information concerning the apparatus, however, is the one absolutely indispensable portion of the "trouble shooter's" equipment. If he does not have that information, easily accessible in the form of wiring and circuit drawings, tube data, and so on, he must take time to work it out for himself—while the audience waits. Otherwise he can do nothing except by the miracle of a lucky accident. The manager, therefore, is plainly charged with the responsibility of seeing that he buys all appropriate information at the time he buys his equipment.

(d) Need of Maintenance

It is obvious enough that if a machine requires a great deal of attention, some vital precaution may some day or other be neglected. At the present time well designed sound equipment no longer needs nearly as much maintenance as in the early days. Rapid progress has been made in the direction of semi-automatic functioning.

(e) Price



The price asked for a sound product is very often less than its total cost to the theatre, and sometimes no more than a minor portion of the total cost. The work necessary to install the new apparatus, and the modification of other equipment that may or may not be required before the new appliance can function as it should, are obvious additions to the cost price that are often overlooked because the extent of the installation work, or the necessity for such modifications, are not fully realized. Maintenance cost as well may sometimes prove unexpectedly large or small. These three factors, therefore—installation, modification, maintenance—are to be kept in mind in every case, without exception, as questions that must be answered before the quoted price means anything more than a black mark on white paper. The writer has seen apparatus priced at $250, installed at an expense of $1,000 for labor—and represent a total saving in spite of that fact because of reduced costs of maintenance. The problem of price is very plainly infinitely greater than mere acceptance of a quoted figure. The manager must always inquire into the secondary possibilities.

(f) Common Sense and Experience

The inspection items listed above—good workmanship, accessibility of parts, presence of trouble-finding aids, need of maintenance and the compilation of cost, will be added by the manager to the results of any theatre tests he may make, and to his opinion of the reliability of the manufacturer, as based upon reputation, advertising and the common talk of the industry. He will add to all this data the benefit of whatever special advice he has been able to secure, whether from his own projectionists or from other sources. The whole makes up a body of influences that is being weighed against considerations of overall price, and must be brought to bear upon the more doubtful questions of length of service, or value of guarantees.

The complexity of the sound purchasing problem is therefore still very considerable. The advantage of competent and disinterested technical advice upon each individual decision is evident—the advantage of the manager's coming to know as much about sound equipment as he can possibly learn is likewise plain. There will be many occasions when detailed knowledge alone will serve to find the answers.

But those answers once found, balancing them against one another is a very different and much more familiar matter. That is a business problem like any other, to be solved, like any other, by common sense and the practical commercial experience of the exhibitor. Perhaps this last reflection will rob the problem of sound purchasing of some of its present complexity, and leave a substantial percentage of it upon common ground, on which the manager is perfectly accustomed and at home.

Projection and sound equipment installed on the new Dollar Line passenger ship, President Coolidge, preparatory to its first trip around the world. The vessel is elaborately equipped for both talking pictures and public address. Twelve permanent dynamic speakers are located in the various lounges and salons. The sound installation, which was by Western Electric, required special panels for controlling the speakers and for the connection of the various methods of reproduction to the distributing system and stage horn. The view at left shows the projection room, with a portion of the main amplifying system in the right foreground. At left is shown the main amplifier as seen through a porthole in the main salon. The upper half of the left-hand section contains input switching facilities together with a radio broadcasting receiver and associated rectifier. The three uper panels of the right-hand section contains the switching facilities for control and distribution to the public rooms and staterooms. The other panels contain the main amplifier equipment. The entire installation was engineered by the special division of Erpi, with layouts and special panel designs by H. A. DePalma and F. W. Nickerson, while the latter was in charge of the actual installation.

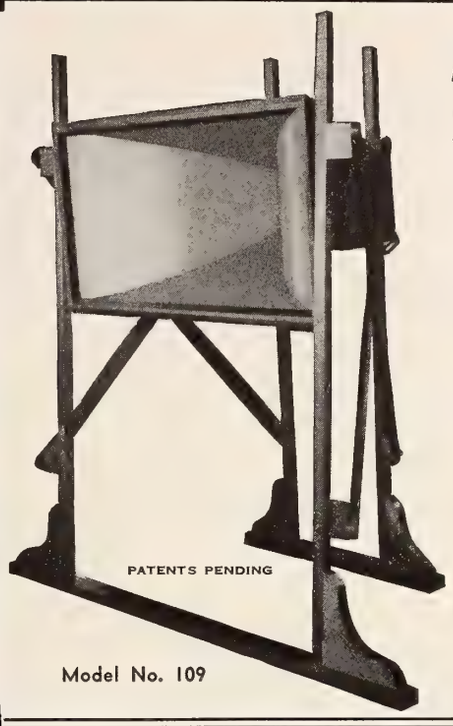
Equipment News and Comment

HE LOOKS AT 1932

● This is the proper time of the year for looking toward another year, always an interesting business, especially if it turns out that you were right. It depends, of course, on who does the prophesying. Certainly, in matters concerning sound, Carl M. Weber, president of the Weber Machine Corporation, should be well conversant with conditions out of which (unless sidetracked) the future grows. And first of all, Mr. Weber offers the prophecy that 1932 will see the complete elimination of disc equipment!



Mr. Weber has written quite a lengthy letter about 1932, including some things about the year we are about to finish (if it hasn't already finished us!). Regarding the prophesied elimination of all disc reproduction, he writes:

"This change will be for the better, not only from the angle of better sound, but also because it will reduce the cost of handling sound pictures. We may therefore eliminate the discussion of disc prints and confine ourselves to sound-on-film only.

"The developments for sound-on-film have been remarkable in the last year. Not only in improved recording, but also improved reproduction. The most marked improvement has been in reproduction. This has been possible by the remarkable improvement in photocells, tubes and amplifiers. The optical system has also had a large share toward better sound reproduction. The lenses used in the better grades of optical systems are of as high a quality as the finest camera lense, and in many cases the lens system used in the sound head is of greater precision and quality than the lens used in the projector.

"All in all, the year of 1931 has been a year of great development in the sound industry. Not only has the quality of all units involved been greatly improved, but prices have been greatly reduced. Price reduction has not only been possible by improved manufacturing methods, but by keen competition of many equipment manufacturers.

"Four major units are involved for perfect sound reproduction; namely, the sound head, amplifiers, speaker units and acoustics. Each one of these units is more or less complex, as each one is an assembly of other units that must function properly in order that the whole may perform as it should. Perfect sound consists in the perfection of small details, any one of which may make or break the entire set-up. Up to the present time the weakest link in the chain of perfect sound was the speaker

SYNCROFILM

NATURAL

People pay to hear natural voices and music. Syncrofilm gives them exactly what is recorded on the film. Four times as much light as usual is passed through the sound track by Syncrofilm. Every mark is impressed on the photocell, which catches all the fine tones that make voices natural. Better box-office receipts follow a Syncrofilm installation. That pays.

INEXPENSIVE

Syncrofilm prices are very low when you consider how finely Syncrofilm is made. They are still low when compared with the average of the market. Syncrofilm cannot be made to give its wonderful life-like tones and be kept free from "outlaw" noises for less money. What Syncrofilm does is bring you the business you would expect from sound equipment costing twice the price of Syncrofilm.

TROUBLE FREE

You don't have to spend anything keeping Syncrofilm in condition. It is built like the finest watches. Where wear might give trouble, it is prevented by plating with chromium, most durable of metals. Corrosion is prevented by cadmium plating. There is no sliding friction—everything turns on easy-rolling bearings.

GUARANTEED

Your money back if you are not satisfied. That means exactly what it says — no strings or conditions. Nearly 1,500 pairs of Syncrofilm are in use and not one has been returned for refund. You can't lose on a proposition like this. Tell us the make and model of your projectors.

unit. The larger the frequency range, the better the reproduction and up to the present time there is no speaker available that will handle the full range of frequencies recorded and passed through the associated apparatus. While this may be true theoretically, the modern horn and unit gives remarkable results if associated apparatus is of the proper quality.

"Sound in the theatre has passed the experimental stage and today it is only a matter of proper equipment, properly installed. The present trend is toward all a.c.-operated equipment in preference to battery-operated. A.c. equipment has simplicity in operation in its favor, also fewer parts which have a limited life and must be replaced periodically.

"In changing over to a.c.-operated theatre sound equipment, we are going through the same stages of development as radio, only at a much faster pace. All a.c.-operated equipment is the ultimate goal, but there is a necessity for much improvement before all a.c.-operated equipment will give as good sound as properly built battery equipment.

"The records of all sound companies show a continued decline in service, as the requirements for sound apparatus have been better understood and all units are built with larger safety factors, which reduces the number of breakdowns. Projectionists are also more familiar with sound apparatus and can handle all minor difficulties without assistance. Therefore, service is not the vital factor that it was a few years ago.

"Summarizing from the above, the year 1932 will not see any radical changes in sound equipment."

CURRENT CONTROL

● An automatic current controller for arc projection machines has just been brought out by Cutler-Hammer. This new controller is designed to replace the usual knife switches used to control the current to the carbons, the principle motives being to attain greater safety and to diminish maintenance costs.

The heavy currents required by the projection machine are handled by heavy duty magnetic contactors, of the same type as used in steel mill service. These contactors have magnetic blowouts, which reduce arcing, resulting in longer life and reduced maintenance costs. Only the pushbutton master switch is mounted on the machine, near the operator—the controller proper can be mounted with the resistor in any out of the way place. By pushing the "start" button of the master switch, the operator obtains a low current for warming the carbons. Then, after a definite time interval, he can transfer to high current for normal projection by pushing the "run" button in the master switch.

The definite time interval (about one second) which must expire before the operator can transfer from low or starting current to the high running current, is to assure that the carbons are sufficiently warm to prevent sputtering and its resulting damage to the craters and reflector. This control scheme is designed to give the operator more time to adjust the carbons of the machine.

The controller proper consists of three magnetic contactors, one of which has a hold-out coil to give time lag between low and high currents. These are mounted on a slate panel in a heavy, sheet steel enclosure. The pushbutton master switch has three buttons, marked "stop," "start" and "run." Where desired, indicating lights can be incorporated in the pushbutton master switch to show whether low or high current is on.

New Cutler-Hammer current control

OVAL TUBING AND CABLE

● Two new additions to the General Electric line of wiring materials are oval tubing and oval BX cable.

Oval tubing is a thin-walled, rigid metal raceway designed for under-plaster extension installations in walls and ceilings. It is installed by cutting a groove in the plaster, inserting and fastening the tubing, and covering it with a layer of plaster. A specially-designed toggle with a loop securely holds the tubing in place, insuring a firm installation. It may be used in direct connection with rigid conduit by joining it to the conduit with one fitting. The tubing may be interchanged with any other wiring system.

The oval BX cable incorporates all the features of BX cable plus its oval shape, a factor to make it particularly adaptable for all exposed or surface wiring. The oval cable lies into the plaster without need of channeling the walls and ceilings.

SERIES OF METAL HORNS

● A full series of all-metal trumpet horns has been brought out by the Fox Engineering Company of Toledo. The horns are six feet long with a bell diameter of 32 inches, and are made of spun aluminum. They are characterized by light weight—weighing only 12 pounds.

BY WAY OF NEWS

● Harry W. Acton, for many years general manager of the Brilliantone Steel Needle Company, selling agency of the W. H. Bagshaw Company, has formed a new manufacturing company to be known as the H. W. Acton Company, with offices at 370 Seventh Avenue, New York, and manufacturing plant at Providence, R. I. This company will continue to act as sole selling agent for Bagshaw.

DISTRIBUTORS OF THE WORLD'S FULCO BEST THEATRE EQUIPMENT

SERVICE

THE TIME TO BE CRITICAL IS BEFORE YOU BUY!

My good friend, F. H. Richardson, of the MOTION PICTURE HERALD, states in his article in the Better Theatres Section, September 26th, 1931, issue, on page fifty-four, as follows:

> "By invitation of the E. E. Fulton Company, I visited that firm's New York City salesroom and inspected the new Fulco Projector, now being marketed by that company. C. H. Fulton, President, takes considerable pride in this particular piece of apparatus, which has many unique features. It is, in fact, in many respects, quite radically different from the motion picture Projectors now in use in this country and Canada."

Absolutely and positively, I am proud of Fulco Projectors, and the biggest hurdle we have to overcome in our business is get the Owner, Manager, or Operator to compare, as I have, before they buy or comment on which is the best Projector on the market.

A complete comparison of Fulco Projectors will acquaint you with the vital mechanical features which determine the strength, long life, and ultimate economy of Fulco Projectors.

Many of these features are little known to Owners, Managers, and Operators—Chiefly because most of them accept a standard, and know not why. The Features of the Fulco Projector are interesting and important, because they are the foundation on which Fulco Projector performance is based. Make it a point to familiarize yourself with these stand-out features.

What Owners, Managers, and Operators should know about Fulco Projectors, is illustrated and described in our new Fulco Booklet, which will be off the press next month, January 1932. Send for your copy.

AN innovation, the first of its kind. A program light in the back of every seat. Simply push the button and a small battery flashlight emits a shaft of light so patrons may refer to programs during dark scenes.

Seated with 3000 American Seating Company Chairs!!

SPECIALLY built for the Earl Carroll Theatre, this chair is a marvel in beauty and comfort. It has a spring upholstered back and full spring seat of the mattress comfort edge type, with hidden aisle lights. Backs are covered with salmon mohair plush of brilliant modernistic design.

BEAUTIFUL, unique and different, the new Earl Carroll Theatre in New York is the largest and most outstanding legitimate play house in the world. That American Seating Company chairs—3000 of them—were installed, is a distinction which reflects the recognition so generally accorded "American" quality and service.

Deep, roomy, comfortable chairs... the kind that just naturally induce relaxation. Beautiful chairs . . . built with a view to improve acoustics. Chairs that serve better, and last longer.

Seating specialists for over a half century, the "American" organization was the first to establish research for chair improvement . . . first to establish testing laboratories for quality maintenance, and the first to develop the compensating hinge. Owners and managers will find our seating service economical, efficient, intelligent. Profit by using it.

One-Contract Plan Assures Satisfaction

Maximum efficiency at minimum cost results are assured every new theatre enterprise or complete renovation job engineered under the Fulton One-Contract Plan.

The One-Contract Plan means that all phases of the enterprise are carefully considered in relation one to another, not by a single specialist but by various experts and engineers, each working independently, yet co-operatively and with full knowledge and understanding of each other's activities.

Under the scrutiny of these engineers, faults of plan or proposed equipment specified in original plans are unerringly spotted and rectified in advance of installation.

Equally important to the completed job is the assurance of proper installation—your guarantee of proper performance from the right equipment.

Thus the One-Contract Plan offers a sure check on lost motion, wasteful purchases and insurance that real economy will prevail from start to completion of the theatre job.

F. H. RICHARDSON'S COMMENT

• • AND ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES •

F. H. Richardson

A PLEA FOR ACTION TO CURB GRAININESS

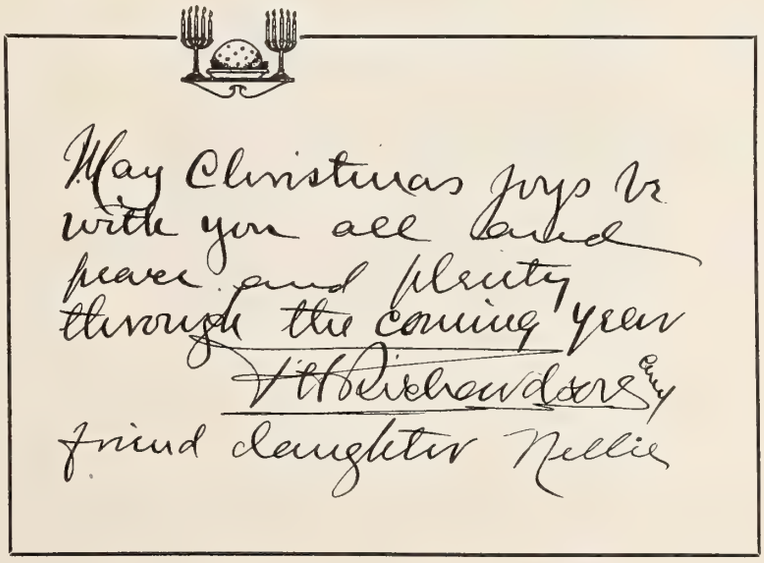
SEVERAL TIMES I have directed attention to what today is, and for years has been, a fault in the motion picture image that is by far the greatest of all physical faults. But directing attention seems to have had little effect. This fault is graininess.

Enter any theatre. The picture may seem sharp and well defined from the rear seats, but as you walk down the aisle, note the difference. Sit down, say, 20 or 30 feet from the screen and observe it with a good opera glass. You may be amazed at the transformation. The scene which looked good or fairly good to the naked eye is a jumbled mass of tumbling specks. Those specks represent what we call graininess.

"But," you say, "if the scene looks all right to the naked eye, what is wrong? We do not view a picture through an opera glass."

That sounds logical, but like many other things, it does not work out in practice, for while the picture "looks all right" to the unaided eye, you might be literally astounded at how very much more beautiful it would look were that graininess eliminated.

Can it be eliminated? Well, as to that I cannot speak with authority, but I am told by those who should know that at least very largely it can be, and if that be true, then I hold the motion picture industry to be standing very, very much in its own light by not doing that thing, always provided that in the process of elimination other equally objectionable faults be not introduced.



There are a great many things the average man does not seem able to realize or recognize for the simple reason that they are not plainly visible. They are not waved right under his honorable nose, and that is just about exactly the situation with regard to graininess.

The average man at the studio sees only a picture which has relatively slight magnification. It looks good. He goes into a theatre, but does not, as a rule, go down front. He knows better than to do that, but does not stop to reason it out that the reason for the poor front seat picture is largely graininess.

From his far back location the picture looks good. He sees little or no graininess. He fails to realize that, excellent as the screen image seems, were it free from the curse of graininess, it would appear still much better.

Let me cordially invite studio men, including the very highest executives, to go to any theatre, or better still, to any half-dozen Hollywood theatres, sit within, say, 30 to 40 feet of the screen, and pull down on it with a good opera glass.

In some productions the graininess is relatively slight. In others it is nothing short of terrible. One production engineer told me graininess can be stopped, or very largely so. Well, then why is it not done? Why are projectionists forced to have their work constantly depreciated by something entirely out of their control, but within the control of the studio engineers? And should the studio engineers not be as interested in results as the projectionists?

RUBBER-HEELED PROJECTORS

SOME WHILE ago A. P. Sitton, Jr., projectionist at the Muse theatre, Tularosa, N. Mex., sent some photographs and a full discussion of his experience with sound. The article was very long, so I laid it aside to examine it when I had more leasure. Like most things we "put off," it has, in the rush of work, remained "put off" all this while, for which I most 'umbly apologize, as the article, once I got to it, proved most interesting. I have many times warned my readers not to do exactly what I have myself been guilty of doing. I apologize, to all my readers and to Brother Sitton. I shall deal with the article by paragraphs. In one he says:

"After installing sound equipment we very soon discovered that vibration and sound reproduction did not work well together. The projectors set up a certain amount of both noise and vibration, so we tried an experiment. Using an automobile jack, we raised the front end of our projectors just enough to take the weight off the legs. We then secured from a shoemaker some rubber heels, such as are used on shoes. Loosening the leg clamps we raised the front legs enough to permit slipping one of the heels under each leg, shoved the legs down on the heels and tightened up the leg clamps. This process was then repeated with the rear legs.

"If you are careful, you will not get the projectors out of line doing this. If you do, it will require but little effort and time to readjust them. You may be able to shake the projectors slightly when on the rubber, but don't get fussed up over that.

REFERENCE BOOK OF THE INDUSTRY

They won't move when running, unless you pull some rough stuff. You may be rather surprised at how much more quietly and smoothly your projectors will run. Not only will a lot of noise be eliminated in the projection room, but also if your projectors set on concrete, which is carried by a steel frame that joins the steel of the auditorium balcony floor, you may find it to be much more quiet in the auditorium as well."

Now, gentlemen, that doesn't sound at all unreasonable to me. I would say it is well worth a try-out. I recommend that our projector manufacturers examine into the feasibility of setting their projectors on some sort of base designed to absorb both sound and vibration. True, as Sitton says, it might be possible to move the projectors slightly on such a base, but they would instantly return to normal, and the men would quickly learn to guard against any movement when the projector is in operation. I would imagine that as Sitton says, the mechanisms would run more smoothly and quietly, though of course the "smoothly" part of it would be due entirely to elimination of noise.

In another section of the article Friend Sitton says, "Our Samson F-7 fader has 14 points. We found that when a setting of five or more was necessary, we got much surface noise, which we finally traced to the vibration of the pre-amplifiers.

"The pre-amplifiers are mounted in metallic cases and rest upon a very good sponge-rubber base. This base, however, was unable to absorb all the vibration. Under it (the sponge rubber base) we placed a very light framework of wood. We then made some light coil springs by winding spring wire around a broom handle, and suspended the aforesaid frame work carrying the rubber base, from the top of the metal case, so that the whole thing just about "floats" on the springs. We were careful to make the springs only just strong enough to carry the amplifying unit.

"Under this plan the amplifiers have both the rubber base and springs between them and any possible source of vibration. It is now possible to run the projectors with everything on, and the fader up to the highest point, with only a very little surface noise. The slight remaining noise comes from the P. E. cell. With the fader set at 12, there is no noise at all."

This is recommended to the attention of both the makers of sound equipment and to projectionists. Unfortunately, Brother Sitton has not advised us of the make of the equipment.

There is much more to his letter, which will have further attention a bit later. Such stuff as this is very valuable.

Select Proven Equipment* for Sound-on-Film

Operadio was the first to provide an all A.C. operated, completely self-contained Sound-on-Film Amplifier for small theatres.

Now hundreds of theatres are receiving remarkable performance from the Operadio Model 408 D.T. Sound-on-Film Amplifier. Absolute dependability plus low first cost enables these units to make money for their owners.

When you select Sound-on-Film equipment, look for the Operadio name plate on the amplifier—it is your guarantee of proven dependability.

Consider These Points:

1. Reproduces both Sound-On-Disc and Sound-On-Film with excellent tone.
2. One unit replaces everything between sound head and stage speakers.
3. A.C. operated and entirely self-contained. Furnishes power for photoelectric cell and exciter lamp.
4. Equipped with volume control, line voltage control, and exciter lamp current control.
5. Two indicating meters allow exact setting of line voltage and exciter lamp current.
6. Sold and installed by leading supply houses everywhere.

*Proven equipment—that which has been produced in large quantities and has been in actual theatre operation long enough to establish its dependability.

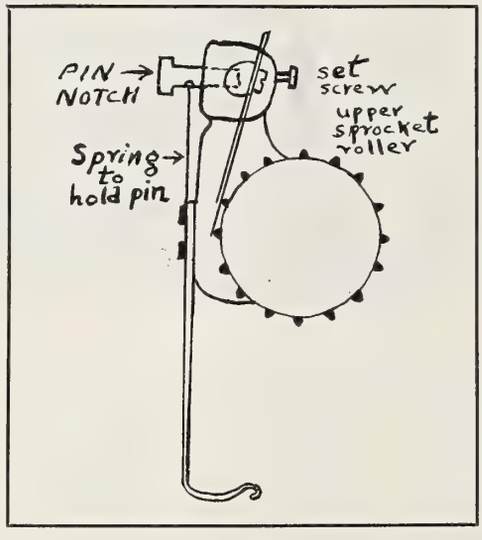
As, on April 28, 1930, I addressed the projectionists and theatre managers of Wilkes Barre, Penn. Here we are all gathered on that day and date. How many now are scattered to the four winds, and how many have "gone on?" The arrow points to my 'umble self, who, it may be conceded, here looks somewhat younger than he does in 1931.—F. H. R.

In a storage battery in good condition and fully charged, the electrolyte (having a specific gravity of .1275) will not freeze with any temperature known in either the United States or Canada. If the specific gravity has sunk to .1250, or in other words, the battery is nearly half discharged, it will freeze at about 60° F. below zero. If it be still further discharged, until the specific gravity reading is about .1215, or the battery is half-discharged, then at about 20° below it will freeze. At .1180, or three-fourths-discharged, it will freeze at about zero. Fully discharged, it will freeze at 20° above.

In Northern U. S. and in Canada it is risky to permit the specific gravity of the batteries to drop much in winter. Also, regardless of risk of freezing, it is very bad practice. Keep the specific gravity up. Not only will your battery service be better, but the batteries will last longer.

WANTS TO IMPROVE HIMSELF

I HAVE a letter from Devil's Lake, N. Dak., from a man who says, "I have been a motion picture projectionist for seven years. I wish to better myself, starting from the very bottom in sound and electrical engineering. May I ask you to forward information relative to a good, reliable correspondence school on these subjects. I would like to get into touch with some local on the West Coast, any one with which I might enter my application as a motion picture projectionist."



Just what is meant by that last I don't know. If this gentleman desires to join a West Coast local, it can't be done at this time. I believe every local in all this broad land, as well as in Canada, just now has more men than can possibly be used. Anyhow, if it is desired to join a local, the thing to do is to get in touch with the one nearest to you. One had better write the president, IATSE & MPMO, 1450 Broadway, New York City, asking the address of the nearest local. Tell him just where Devil's Lake is—what part of the state—when you write.

As to a reliable school, the only one I can recommend is the R.C.A. Institute, 75 Varick Street, New York City. This is a subsidiary of R.C.A. itself. It gives an excellent course, I believe, in sound and sound only. Whether or not it gives a correspondence course, I cannot say.

METHOD TO AID IN CLEANING GUARD

AN INTERESTING suggestion has come from Bob Jewett, projectionist at the Majestic theatre in Nelsonville, O. Not at the moment having a Simplex mechanism before me, I am unable to make any comment, other than that I have copied Brother Jewett's description almost verbatim, and recommend that you examine its possibilities. He says:

"I have used several of suggestions for projectionists and now will submit one myself. I have tried to illustrate it and hope you may understand.

"In cleaning the Simplex upper sprocket guard, much difficulty is encountered because of the fact that the guard is held stationary. I have remedied this condition by drilling a hole opposite the set screw, before loosening the set screw, this latter because the set screw will hold the thing firmly while drilling is in progress. The hole must line up with the two screws holding the upper sprocket spring. The hole drilled must extend half-way through the rod holding the guard. The pin shown is then used to hold the guard firmly. A screwdriver may then be used to back the pin out, so that the guard may be turned upward for cleaning. The pin should be notched, so that the pin may be inserted. Apply the spring on top of the lower sprocket spring to hold the pin in place."

Without the mechanism in question before me all this is a bit foggy, but anyhow there it is. With the mechanism before you for examination, you should understand exactly what Brother Jewett is driving at. Many thanks to him for giving us a look-see at it, anyhow.

EFFECT OF LIGHT COLORS

IN A RECENT letter, David Armstrong of Mobile, Ala., asks, "Is it possible to alter the sound effect by altering the light value entering the p.e. cell? In this I do not refer to the amount of light, but to its quality. Also just how much effect has distance of negative carbon from positive crater on the amount of light reaching the collector lens of the condenser?"

Two pretty stiff questions, Friend Armstrong. The color of the light emitted by the exciting lamp is a matter which, so far as I know, is entirely out of the control of the projectionist. Its color does, however, make quite a lot of difference. Some cells, notably those at least once used in W. E. equipment, function best with a light of decidedly bluish tinge. This, I am advised by ERPI engineers, is because the cell coating is of metallic potassium.

Another type of p.e. cell, such as is used, for example, by R.C.A., has a coating of caeseum. These cells function best with a light of yellowish tint. That is about all I know about the matter. I take small interest in it for the reason that the projectionist must use the lamps supplied, hence he is unable to control the color of light produced.

As to the negative carbon tip, you would have to tell me the type of lamp you have in mind before I could give any definite answer. In general, however, the carbon tips should be as far apart as is compatible with carrying a steady arc. If the negative tip be unnecessarily close, there will be undue interference set up, of course. I do not know, however, that it would have much value, even were I or some one else to make tests to ascertain the exact losses. There is but one right way to "carry" a projection arc, and that is with as much length as is possible with a steady arc and steady screen illumination.

LIKES PROJECTING BETTER 'N BETTER

I HAVE A LETTER FROM L. W. Smail of Mock's theatre, Gerard, O., who says, "I have long been a reader of 'our department' in Motion Picture Herald. I thoroughly enjoy every word of advice and criticism you have to offer.

"As to 2,000-foot reels, here's hoping your word has had some effect, because I have had my fill of doubling up 1,000-foot reels. [That is a bit ambiguous, but I take it Brother Smail wants 2,000-foot reels.—F. H. R.]

"As to splices, well they have always been a constant source of dread to me. In my territory there are plenty of projectionists who seem to have the idea that they are the only ones using the prints. If a print holds out until they are through with it—well, that is quite sufficient.

"I have been grinding 'fillums' since 1917. I find the work to be more interesting with each passing year. Talking pictures appeal to me in a big way. The projectionist who does not regard his job as in the nature of a dignified profession should, as you have often said, be somewhere else than in the projection room. He might, for example, make a good blacksmith.

"This is my first letter to you. I have not written because I have had nothing to say that has not been said already, either by yourself or by brother projectionists."

I was just wondering how many separate frame-images this good brother has looked at. In the 14 years he said he has been watching the screen—at least I hope and believe he has, though there are a lot of men who don't watch it very closely, I am sorry to say—he has been shooting something like 1,400 photographs at the screen each minute. If he is watching the screen he sees every one of them, therefore, if he works six hours a day, he has looked at about 468,000 photographs per day. In ten days he has looked at 4,680,000. In one year he has—Oh, what's the use? Figure it out for yourself!

As to only writing when you have something to say that no one else has said—well, that's not so good. Things may be said over and over and over again with value—and large value, too. As a matter of fact, these columns have already said some things many hundreds of times, and doubtless will say them hundreds of times again.

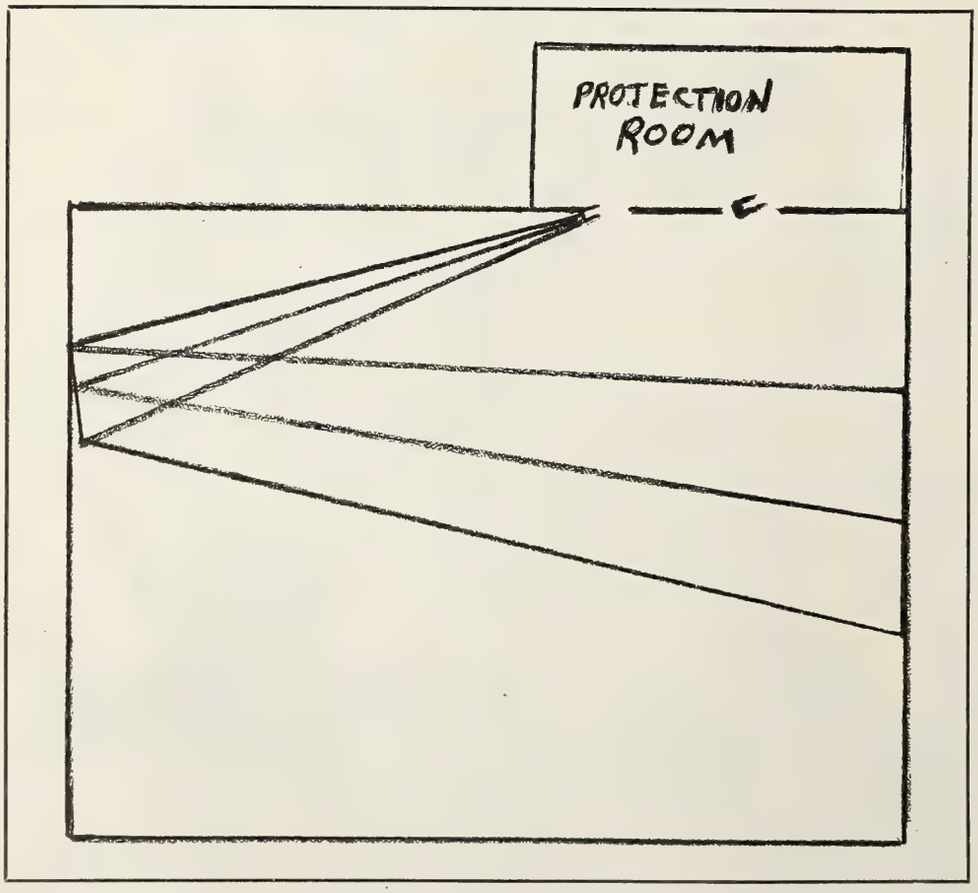
comparison with the spot formed by the straight arc, when the reflector type lamp operates at such a comparatively low amperage.

The answer, is at least largely, that due to the fact that the straight arc employs a condensing lens of considerable thickness, and that thickness of glass absorbs or stops a large proportion of the heat rays, which, with the reflector lamp employing no reflector, are all projected to the spot, together with the visible light rays. Even with the reflector lamps using a condenser, the same is quite thin and stops a relatively small percentage of the invisible heat rays.

PERISCOPIC PROJECTION

SOME WHILE AGO this department published a scheme of periscopic projection tried out in Philadelphia. In that case the projectors were over the auditorium, the light beam being projected downward and reflected to the screen. I now see by the Cinematographic Times, an English publication, that somewhat the same thing is being tried out in England in the Electric Cinema town hall, Buckingham. In this case, however, the projection room is located at the side of the auditorium.

The general plan of operation is shown in the accompanying diagram. As you will see, there are two serious objections, and one that is not so serious. First, there will inevitably be a very heavy side distortion to the picture. In this particular instance, the mirrors are placed at, roughly, a 45° angle, and with such an angle it is obvious that one side or the other will be pretty badly out of focus, or else both sides will be slightly out. Also at such a heavy angle, particularly for the projector at the right in the drawing, the distortion will be pretty bad, unless the reflecting mirrors be very far away from the screen.



The next serious objection is the inability of the projectionist to have a good view of the screen. Outside of the difficulty of seeing the screen at all, it seems to me it would be very difficult to judge sharpness of focus accurately.

The third objection is the absorption of light by the mirrors themselves, but this need not necessarily be serious, because we nowadays have plenty of light. It seems to me that if I were going to try that kind of stunt at all, I would place the projection room farther forward and place the mirrors in the center of the rear wall. This would do away with the distortion, but would, of course, make it more difficult for the projectionist to view the screen.

I still have grave doubts, however that any kind of periscopic projection is a desirable method.

USE OF A 5-WIRE SYSTEM

FROM T. L. Davis of Mexico, Mo., I have a letter asking if there is any such thing as a 5-wire system. If so, he wants to know how it operates. Also, he asks what is the highest intermittent speed ever attempted for motion picture projection.

Rough diagram of periscopic projection arrangement.

Yes, there is a 5-wire system in use in some sections of Europe. I don't know very much about it, except that there are five wires, each with a differential of 110 volts between it and its neighboring conductor. I think it is chiefly employed for power distribution, the main advantage being that it is possible to use motors of 110, 220, 240 or 550 volts, and with high-voltage motors no starting box is required. The motor is started on 110 direct, then additional voltage is cut in, in 110-volt steps, until the motor voltage rating is reached. So far as I am aware, the system has never been used on this side of the Atlantic.

I am not certain as to the highest intermittent speed, but believe a beater movement was speeded up as high as 8-to-1 by a manufacturer many years ago, though that speed was only used for experimental purposes. The highest speed I know of ever employed in present type intermittent movements for motion picture projectors was a little more than 5-to-1. It was found to be commercially impracticable. Too great a strain was imposed on both the film sprocket holes and the projector mechanism.

HOT SPOT—A BAD CONDITION

A. D. KRAATZ, chief projectionist of the Queen theatre in Wharton, Tex., writes, "I note with interest the letter from George Jacobi, published in the September 26th issue. We at one time had some trouble like that—film buckling on the first run, afterwards running perfectly. The trouble had vanished into thin air. For awhile I was on the verge of having my eyes examined. There is no explanation for the trouble that I am able to offer. Our equipment is all in good condition. If anyone can explain this particular trouble I certainly would be glad to have him do it.

"We have recently installed new lamps of a well known make, and believe me, brother, they are hot! After two runs we can count the frame lines with our fingers. That is a bad condition, but we are planning to install rear shutters soon.

"All of us (three men) are in favor of having film reach us on 2,000-foot reels. We use them in this theatre and have done so for two years.

"There is one thing I would like to have explained: Is there any difference in the working principle of the new W.E. 3-A photoelectric cell and the old one? If there is, please tell us what it is. We find them far superior to the 2-A type.

"This is my first letter in a long while. Nowadays there is so much work to do that to write very often is too great a task. However, I read the department regularly, as well as the others."

The hot spot represents a very bad condition. I feel that I cannot too strongly advise exhibitors having the front shutters to discard them immediately and install rear shutters.

As to the working difference, in principle, of the two photoelectric cells, quoting Erpi: "The 3-A photoelectric cells differ from both the 1-A's and the 2-A's in construction and in composition. Also, they have a higher output level and a longer life. They may be used interchangeably with the other cells in a 206-A reproducer set, provided certain changes have been made in the p.e. cell amplifier. The light sensitive material, instead of being deposited upon the glass wall of the cell, is coated upon the surface of a semi-cylindrical metal plate. It is important that the cell, when mounted upon the holding clip, and the window of the compartment, be so placed that the plane formed by the front edges of this plate is parallel to the face of the window."

I might add that all three types are filled with the same kind of gas, but whereas the 2-A carries a coating of potassium hydride, the new type (3-A) has a coating of caesium oxide, carried on the semi-circular plate.

ARE DRY CELLS REALLY DRY?

IN A RECENT letter Andrew L. Schloss of Omaha, Neb., asks, "Will you be good enough to tell us just what a dry battery is and how it is made. I have had an argument with an Omaha projectionist. I say there is no such thing as a really dry battery. He says a dry battery is just that. There is no liquid in it. Who is right."

You are, Friend Schloss. No really dry battery could produce current for more than a minute or so. A dry battery, or cell, is an arrangement in which moisture or "liquid" is held in suspension. It is of course dry in comparison with wet batteries. The chief trouble in producing an acceptable dry battery is to have it be and remain sufficiently wet. The dry battery is a modification of the Leblanche battery, or cell, which consists in a glass jar containing a solution of ammonium chloride, or sal ammoniac in water. In this liquid is placed a plate of zinc and a porous cup containing a carbon plate and a mixture of broken gas retort carbon, and powdered manganese dioxide.

The latter is packed around the carbon plate. It also is placed in the solution in the center of the jar. The ammonium chloride forms the electrolyte. The broken carbon mixed with manganese dioxide acts as a depolarizer.

The dry cell is made up as follows: A container of zinc is set in an outer covering, usually of paper. Inside this is an exciting substance in the form of a paste or jelly, which supplies the necessary moisture. The zinc cell, by the way, forms the positive plate.

In the center is a rod of carbon, surrounded by a depolarizing material in the form of a black paste made up of manganese dioxide, powdered carbon, plus graphite intermixed with moistened ammonium chloride. In some batteries a bit of zinc chloride is added. This mixture usually is contained in a porous bag. The white substance before mentioned, lines the zinc container. It is composed of a solution of ammonium chloride mixed with plaster of paris. Not infrequently a small amount of other materials are added to improve the consistency of the mixture.

ALERT in other phases of theatre management, many owners fail to give full consideration to their back stage problems. The result is costly operation due either to faulty or inadequate stage equipment.

Organizations which have installed Peter Clark, Inc., products avoid this waste, besides reaping many additional benefits in efficiency and utility, from the use of this leading type of theatrical stage equipment.

Throughout the country, theatres, both large and small, depend daily upon the "time and money saving" advantages of Peter Clark, Inc., equipment. In every instance more thoroughly coordinated operation has resulted.

The carbon rod, of course, forms the negative pole, and the whole is covered and sealed in. The voltage is about 1.5.

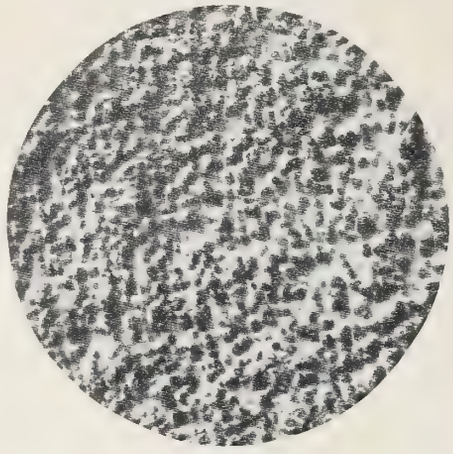
There, Friend Schloss, those are the chief features of a "dry" battery, which is not, of course, really dry at all. If it were it would not work.

NEW PROJECTION ACCESSORIES

AT THE Society of Motion Picture Engineers' meeting this fall, the Chicago Cinema Equipment Corporation displayed some equipment which has not as yet received the attention it deserves.

This company had on exhibit its rear shutter, the bracket of which is of heat-treated cast iron. The shutter shaft is of 7/16-inch needle steel, supported by two bronze bearings at the gear end, and by a ball bearing at the shutter end. The shutter itself is of aluminum—the hub of cast aluminum. The device is apparently well made and efficient. It is a very complete job and is easily mounted by the projectionist. The shutter moves the air towards the projector aperture.

There also was on display a set of stabilizers for use with W. E. universal bases and Simplex-type, 3-point and 5-point bases. These stabilizers are heavily constructed and accurately fitted with telescopic rods. They are designed to furnish an absolutely rigid support for the lamphouse, without interfering with ability to tilt the projector at will. The company also shows us a motor driven slide carrier built to accommodate three 4x5 effect slides, or a single effect slide measuring 4x15 inches. This device may be attached to any standard effect holder. It can be adjusted up, down or sidewise, or may be pivoted within a wide angle to project effects, either vertically or horizontally, across the proscenium. This device is constructed entirely of aluminum.



We also saw a variety of removable apertures, eight in number, and a hold-back sprocket designed for use in the older types of W. E. sound outfits. The hold-back sprocket's work is to eliminate the flutter resulting from the feeding of the film directly from the sound head to the lower magazine.

ARE FILM SURFACES SMOOTH?

MANY ARE the times I have, during the years past and gone, talked to you about the evils of dust and dirt in the projection room, and warned you about the damage done to film surfaces by dust-laden projection room atmosphere.

I presume many of you who have read these statements concerning dust have glanced at the apparently glass-smooth film and wondered how dust could adhere to such a surface. However, film is far from being smooth, at least on the emulsion side.

Accompanying this is a microscopic photograph of the emulsion side of a motion picture film magnified 790 times. Not very smooth, is it? It is fairly evident that such a surface will be quite capable of collecting dust, especially, as is often the case, if the film itself carries a coating of oil.

A dust particle small enough to float through the air for perhaps hours, may find lodgement in a very small depression, and may have sufficient hardness to make a tiny scratch if sufficient pressure be applied and the film be made to slip over another layer of film, as is more or less the case in rewinding.

Certainly, with such a surface as this, carrying a photograph which must be magnified enormously, it is very much up to the projectionist to keep it out of contact with all dust and dirt, which means, of course, that the projection room itself should be kept scrupulously clean so that the air carry no more dust than is necessary.

According to J. I. Crabtree of Eastman, "Under the microscope the base [celluloid] side of the film shows practically no indentations whatever, although after it has been run repeatedly through a projector, it shows scratches consisting in furrows, which tend to become filled with dust and grease and thus to become visible on the screen."

With reference to this article, Mr. Crabtree continued, "The material in the article is quite all right. I think, however, that after speaking of the effects of frictional pressure in rewinding, you might add that the presence of indentations in the emulsion surfaces explains why the emulsion side of film accumulates oil so readily. The oil penetrates into the crater-like holes, and it is impossible to remove the same entirely by wiping the surface of the film with a cloth. The only way to completely remove the oil coating is to treat the film with an oil solvent, such as carbon tetrachloride.

"The presence of the oil on the film in turn causes any dust or dirt coming into contact with the film to adhere thereto, and in case the particle is hard, it tends to cause scratching of the emulsion, either during its passage through the projector, or during the process of rewinding. I am afraid that the particles of dust normally suspended in the air are much greater than that of the pitted marking shown in the photograph. An ordinary particle of dust would probably occupy about one-fourth the entire diameter of the photograph you are showing."

CONCERNING 2,000-FOOT REELS

I HAVE a letter from L. C. Campbell of Miller, S. D., in which he says, "I made note of your editorial on doubling up reels. Here is how it looks to me:

"When a projectionist starts doubling up reels, he is getting too lazy to thread the projector up every ten minutes and desires to rest a while. The amount of splicing in films is growing less and less. Projection work is growing better. You rarely see a misframe, even out here in the sticks. When you have 2,000 feet of explosives on one projector, and you have an accident and have to pay for it out of $15 a week—well, now, don't the single reel look pretty good after all, especially when you consider that the majority of theatres in this country have only one projectionist, and that putting out 2,000-foot reels would only be advantageous to the deluxe houses?

"And now as to the density of films: I wish those birds who make these dense films had to project them with what we have to work with. For example, take the dark scenes in 'Forbidden Adventure.' Try to put those scenes on the screen with an a.c. arc! Just try it once, or try to put a good picture on the screen, using some of the dense stuff with mazda. It just cannot be done! However, what kind of a world would it be if everything was just as we want it to be, and we had nothing to argue about?"

Friend Campbell, your chief point against doubling up is the one which many consider the chief reason for doubling up; namely that there are so many theatres which have one-man projection rooms. With sound equipment, if the projectionist works carefully and puts out the best possible results, I don't think there is much question of his not having much opportunity to rest. Also, the projectionist's place is beside the projector every minute it is running. His being away from the projector usually is the cause of the accidents Campbell speaks of.

With 1,000-foot reels, he must be away from the projector at least twice as often as with 2,000-foot ones, because he must thread up exactly twice as often, which automatically multiplies the chance for serious trouble by two.

Campbell speaks of film as explosive. A motion picture film is just about as explosive as an oaken flooring board. However, when it starts burning it generates gasses with extreme rapidity, and those gases are, under some conditions, explosive.

In the early days, projectors were mounted on a wooden board. In many cases this board was fastened to the top of a sheet metal "film tank," into which the film ran in a loose heap after projection. We usually ran a whole show of from two to three reels into the tank before rewinding. In fact, since our right arm supplied the motive power for projection, we could not rewind the film between performances.

When, in trimming the lamp, some careless man removed a rot hot carbon stub and by accident dropped it on the tank top and it rolled into the film tank, in which from two to three thousand feet of film lay in a loose heap, there were doings and plenty of them—pronto!

When the blaze started it was some considerable blaze! Instantly it struck the film "fuse," which held the tank cover back against the spring pressure, severed it, and bingo! the tank was closed tight. Naturally, with all the gas being generated by the mass of flame inside the tank, high pressure was generated, and in about two or three seconds, at most, something had to give way. In other words, the tank blew up. At least, its door blew off. That, friend Campbell, is where the "film explosion" yarn came from. Film itself is not in the least explosive. The gases, if unconfined, are in almost negligible danger of exploding. In fact, I don't remember any case where unconfined gases from burning film have exploded.

The last sentence of your letter is amusing. I cannot, however, agree with it, or with the idea it seems to convey. We will never have things exactly as we want them, but it nevertheless is highly important that we make every possible effort to make them as perfect as we possibly can make them.

As to the "density of film," we certainly can at least agree on that. The small theatre projectionist has his own troubles when it comes to securing sufficient light with which to project those pictures with even a fair degree of visibility, unless, indeed, he have a very small picture. As to doing it with mazda—well, you just can't!

KNOWLEDGE IS NECESSARY

MANY TIMES I have been asked why it is necessary that the projectionist understand all the practical and technical details of the equipment he is called upon to handle. "Why," says one, "should I be called upon to study and understand the optical principles involved in projection lenses. I am not a lens maker! What possible advantage would such knowledge be to me in my work?" That last is copied verbatim from a letter from a projectionist, who expends three pages arguing that practical knowledge alone has value.

At first glance one might get the impression that there would be little or no advantage resulting from the acquisition of such knowledge, but as we dig just a bit deeper it becomes evident that such an impression is entirely wrong. There is a very distinct advantage gained through the acquisition of such knowledge. We have to seek no further for proof of this than to consider the self evident fact that no man can possibly work with the highest degree of efficiency with equipment which he does not thoroughly understand. It would be foolish to the point of childishness to dispute or even question that fact. It cannot possibly be otherwise. The more knowledge a man has, both technical and practical, of the equipment he is working with, the better equipped he is to get maximum results from it.

Taking the projection lens as a convenient example, in the days when projectionists had little or no knowledge of the motion picture projector optical system, and just about no knowledge of optics of any sort, thousands upon thousands of lenses were being used that were entirely unsuited to the work they were called upon to perform. This was true of both the condenser and the projection lenses. It is doubtful if one projector in one hundred had an efficient optical system, and that one was efficient more by accident than anything else. (All you old-timers know that was true.)

Today, due in considerable extent to the pioneer work of this department and men like John Griffiths, who worked through it, the lens makers, supply dealers and protionists have a far wider knowledge of projector optical train requirements and projector optical train limitations, than they then had, with the result that today we can find a very large proportion of projector optical trains which are efficient and doing really excellent work with a minimum of wasted light and a maximum, or near-maximum, of excellence.

The statement that this department, and men like John Griffiths, working through it, taught lens makers things about the motion picture projector optical train, may seem a bit absurd, but it is nevertheless true. Of course, lens makers were not taught to make lenses through its medium, but this department did, after a battle extending over several years, succeed in prying lens makers loose from a good many preconceived ideas which were wholly and entirely wrong, and in getting them really started studying the needs of the motion picture projector optical system.

Before motion pictures came over the horizon of unhuman affairs, lens makers were making lenses for stereopticon optical trains, and they very naturally tried to adapt the ideas and experiences gained in that work to the new projector.

The optical gentlemen of that day unanimously voted Richardson a nuisance and declared him crazy because he insisted that they were all wrong in some things. Today we all know to be correct these ideas advanced in far-off days.

While it may seem unnecessary that the projectionist know all, for example, about projection lenses, he will at least be able to select his lenses and adjust the projector optical train with a greater degree of intelligence, and secure, in general, better results if he is possessed of full, complete knowledge.

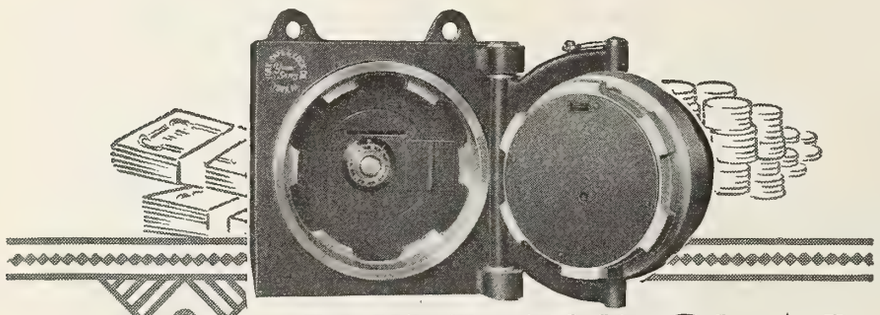
RECTIFICATION EQUIPMENT

FROM IRVING SAMUELS, president of the Automatic Devices Company, Allentown, Pa., comes the following letter, which I print without comment, leaving it to the rotary converter chaps, and any other dissenters, to reply if they wish to. I am printing Mr. Samuels' letter exactly as written.

"Dear Sir: On page 52 of the August 29th issue of BETTER THEATRES, appears a letter from E. C. Van Fradenburg of Manassa, Colo., with particular reference to his experience with rotary converters versus motor-generators for the supply of direct current to projection arcs. There are many reasons why, as he states, motor-generators are being installed almost exclusively for the past several years.



"Rotary converters and motor-generators are the only two practical mediums for converting alternating current into real, continuous direct current. Furthermore, it is quite true that the overall efficiency of a rotary converter may be as much as 5% better than a motor-generator. Any comparison in favor of the rotary converter ends at this point.

"In the first place, and very important for good screen results, the motor-generator does not transmit to its direct current delivery any fluctuation in alternating current within 10% of its rated motor voltage. All commercial a.c. power circuits have a standard allowable voltage variation of 10% above and below normal. Such fluctuations would have a very appreciable effect if passed on to the screen, besides causing the reflector and high intensity arcs to become very erratic in operation. On the other hand, the direct current voltage delivered by a rotary converter must inherently be in a constant ratio with the alternating current voltage delivered to it, and therefore every variation of the a.c. voltage will find its exact counterpart in a similar variation in the direct current voltage. Modern projection practice would not tolerate this.

"Again, the rotary converter is quite an unstable piece of apparatus. When started, it frequently builds up to the wrong polarity, whereas with the motor-generator, positive current is delivered to the positive carbon every time the machine is started, and there is no delay in placing the projection room equipment in operation.

"Rotary converters are complicated in design and operation and cannot compare in reliability with the modern ball bearing, single shaft motor-generator. A 5% gain in effciency represents only a few cents a day and is of no justification or excuse for wide variations in screen brilliancy or the possibility of a totally dark screen, which could easily cause enough loss in the box office to pay for the best motor-generator obtainable.

"Installations of new rotary converters for operating projection arcs have been practically unknown for the past two or three years. However, there are a number to be had on the second-hand market at salvage prices."

BUILD BURGLAR PROTECTION into YOUR TICKET OFFICE

THE installation of a YORK Round Door Chest is so easy and economical that you cannot afford to be without this protection for your cash receipts. Anchored in a block of solid concrete, this sturdy little safe defies all menace of fire and theft. It cannot be removed from the building or attacked at any point except the heavy door. And that will stop any burglar.

When desired, the YORK Chest is also provided with the "Hold-up Partition" as illustrated. Provided with a slot for the insertion of money, this inner door may be kept closed and offers a disconcerting obstruction to bandits who attempt raids during business hours. The saving in burglary insurance alone will pay for a YORK Chest in a reasonable length of time.

LICENSE AND JOINING

IN A RECENT letter, J. B. Ross, Jr., projectionist of the Majestic theatre in Camden, South Carolina, says: "What, if any, states require projectionists to have a license? How may such a license be obtained? At present I am not a union man, so you see there is no need that I be licensed. This town neither issues nor requires license. I would very much like to belong to the union, but the entrance fee of the nearest local is $300, which is more than I can afford."

I have no reliable list of states issuing projectionist licenses. I believe all Canadian provinces do, but only after a very stiff examination. Of our own states, the only ones I am certain about are Pennsylvania, Massachusetts and Connecticut. Many cities issue license. The only way to get one is to make application and appear at the proper time and place, of which applicants are notified, and take the examination. Some states and cities charge a fairly modest fee for examination.

I would appreciate information from projectionists in each state as to the exact situation with regard to state and city licenses.

Your belonging, or not belonging, to the union has nothing to do with licensing. Licensing is not a union matter, but an attempt of the civil authorities to ascertain the proficiency of the individual projectionist, in matters pertaining to projection, based upon safety in operation.

As to joining the union, assuming the local the nearest to you to be willing to admit you: While $300 is a really large sum, still you should join. Doubtless it may be paid in reasonable installments. The union is a strictly business organization. It is the organization which regulates working conditions, wages, etc., and prevents injustice. Also, it not infrequently works injustice itself, but it is nevertheless the best thing we have and has done an immeasurable amount of good work. The "brotherhood" end of it is largely pure bunk. It is a business organization. The employer has no more right to membership in a union than the projectionist would have to object to the employer's membership in a managers' club. As a matter of fact, few of them do now object.

However, if and when the small town projectionist is admitted to membership in the union located in a larger town or city, he cannot possibly expect the union to establish its wage scale in his location. That would be rather unreasonable. In many cases it would be distinctly unfair, since the small town theatre, with its limited patronage, might be quite unable to pay the large town wage scale.

All the small town member has the right to expect is that the union do what it can to help him in such matters, and to be able, later when opportunity comes, to be given a position in a larger theatre located elsewhere. However, it is always best to belong to the organization representing your profession, no matter what it may happen to be, even though membership be a bit costly in money.

WHAT RIPPED THE PERFORATIONS?

EVERY ONCE in a while I am asked to decide some dispute between a theatre manager, or a projectionist, and an exchange. The other day an exhibitor raised the question.

It seems that some new prints were received by a certain theatre upon which the emulsion was green and quite soft. In projecting them, considerable damage was done in the form of ripped sprocket holes, and the question arose as to who was to blame, and who must be the financial "goat."

It seems, too, that the projectionist in this theatre was not satisfied with being a projectionist, but had tried to sell his employer sound apparatus prior to the purchase of the apparatus now installed. After the damage was done (ripped sprocket holes) the projectionist laid the blame to the sound head. I was asked to decide whether or no such damage would occur in the projector mechanism, or in the sound head. The projectionist was, I am advised, of the mature age of 15 years.

I was sent a bundle of correspondence that had passed between the various ones interested. In one of these letters the following occurs:

"The 'operator' evidently ran the films without oiling the top projector sprocket [meaning the projector top sprocket presumably] or waxing the edge of the films. Naturally the tension pads heated up and the intermittent tore the sprocket holes. The equipment is Powers and I have been told that the way films leave the intermittent sprocket, there is more chance for damage on a Powers than on a Simplex."

Without further quotation from these letters, permit me to say that, assuming all the mechanisms to be in good order and in proper adjustment, films will run through a Powers as safely as through any other projector.

As to the ripped sprocket holes, emulsion deposits on tension shoes would be extremely unlikely to increase the braking pressure of the tension shoes to an extent that would rip sprocket holes in new, tough film. If such ripping did occur from that cause, it would be prima facie evidence that there was entirely too much tension, and such misadjustment would be the direct fault of the projectionist, even though he did not himself make the tension adjustment. The fault would be that he did not test the tension, and readjust it to the correct proportions.

However, there are many possible causes for ripped sprocket holes, and as between the sound head and the projector mechanism, there are about one hundred chances to one that the ripping would be done through fault in the projector mechanism. rather than in the sound head.

In another place in this bundle of letters, one who signs himself as "Branch Manager," says, "It is simply a case of the aperture plate being over-heated to the point that caused the film to stick. This could have been prevented by the projectionist running a camel hair brush coated with vaseline over the sprocket holes."

All the projectionist would have to do in that case would be to run the brush coated with vaseline over 12,000 feet of sprocket hole track (assuming the production to be only 6,000 feet long). And at any rate, the projectionist has the right to expect to receive film in usable condition. It is not in his place to spread vaseline along sprocket holes, and if he were caught "oiling the top sprocket" with the idea of having the sprocket deposit the oil on the film, he should be fired forthwith.

CURES FOR BUCKLED FILM

FROM WESTBORO, Mass., comes a letter (the last page of which, carrying the signature, is lost), which reads as follows:

"May I comment on that ever recurring subject; namely, buckled film? This subject seems little understood, although it is the present day projectionist's nightmare.

"Some years ago, Arthur Grey, of the Lancaster theatre, Boston, Mass., wrote a very comprehensive, illuminating paper upon the subject for, as I remember it, the American Projection Society. The chap from down south who wrote our department regarding the fact that a certain print buckled more on hot humid days was quite correct in his assertion. This phenemonen is more noticeable on a print that is, as I term it, 'soft-buckled,' or a rather new print that has started to dry out unevenly. Too bad the technicians and scientific gentlemen cannot get together with that worthy institution, the Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences, and find a solution to this curse. I suppose they will solve it as they did the changeover problem —about 15 years after the theatres began using two projectors. Even that job is still incomplete, owing to the single- and double-reel proposition.

"I have noticed that many of the complainants about buckled film maintain that the buckling occurs more on one projector than on the other, or when tests were made, didn't buckle at all on another projector of similar make. I find that in most cases of this kind, it was caused by misalignment of the gate tension shoes against the film— even though the projector delivered rock steady projection under normal conditions.

"Improper gate alignment is much more common than most projectionists realize. It makes the buckled films project a much worse picture than it would were the tension even on all sides of the gate. I do not mean to imply that the proper alignment is a cure-all for buckled film, but it will go a long way toward reducing this trouble. A soft-buckled, fresh new print cannot be prevented from buckling, no matter what the conditions, other than a cool dry climate, or I might say, a cool dry room.

"There is another film which I shall term 'hard-buckled.' This seems to be more common in this territory than the 'soft-buckled.' It is nothing more or less than a print that is too 'cooked,' and since it is somewhat stiffer it may be controlled by reducing the frequency of the vibration at the film gate, as I have outlined above."

I am sorry I lost the rest of this interesting letter—and the name of our correspondent. However, he may note the omission, and if comment by others is forthcoming (as I hope it will be), he may have something further to say on this important subject.

THAT STRANGE FOCUS TROUBLE

RECENTLY I published a statement of a trouble and asked that projectionists who might have had similar experience contribute their solution. It was that the picture in one theatre went into, and out of, focus, then tried on the projectors of another theatre the print ran perfectly.

In a conversation a prominent New York City projectionist, said, "I noticed the publication of an in-and-out-of-focus trouble which disappeared when the same print was run on the projectors of another theatre. You seemed uncertain as to what could set up such a condition.

"Some years ago I encountered a similar instance and finally located the trouble in the projection lens, one of the combinations of which was loose so that the glass could move or wobble slightly. Tightening the combination cured the trouble."

I will admit that such a possible solution did not occur to me, nor would I have supposed a slight looseness of a combination would permit of sufficient movement to alter the focal length of a lens sufficiently to set up such an effect, or rather an effect as pronounced as the one in question seemed to be.

I cannot now recall who it was asked for help in this matter. It would be quite a job to search through the various departments and find the article. However, I would be interested to know if this solution is really the right one in the case cited.

Perhaps the projectionist who originally wrote in about the trouble will see these lines and let us know, after trying out the solution suggested above, if it worked for him. Or perhaps he has since discovered what the cause of the trouble was, and will let us know.

HARD TO BELIEVE AND YET TRUE

ON SEVERAL occasions projectionists and theatre managers have asked a question which has had me stumped. Nor was I able to dig up any satisfying answer in all the many text books. Here is the question:

"It is not difficult to understand how a microphone diaphragm can, by vibrations, send out into a theatre auditorium one single sound. That is relatively easy, but assuming a large orchestra to be playing, at the same instant of time we know that the low notes of the bass drum, the bass viol and other bass instruments are striking the microphone and being recorded on the film. Also at that same instant of time the notes of a fife, a flute, violins, etc., are reaching the diaphragm. Query: How is it possible for a metallic sheet of metal to receive all these widely different sound waves and frequencies, record them on the film, then have them picked up as a light beam, be transformed into electric current, amplified, retranslated by a second metallic disc into sound waves, and have all those frequencies and wave strength sent out into the air, when there may be 50 or more of them? In other words, how may a metal disc do 50 different things at one and the same time?"

Finally, I decided to propound the question to Electrical Research Products, Inc., asking that corporation to provide the answer. I now have the answer, which runs as follows:

"Possibly the question may best be answered by asking and answering another, namely, What do you hear when listening to an orchestra directly?

"All sound is originated by a vibrating body, or by a number of such bodies. These vibrations set up waves in the air radiating in all directions from the source, and we 'hear' the sound as a result of these waves impinging upon our eardrums. The resulting movement of the eardrum sets up a rather complex, and not entirely understood, series of physiological and psychological reactions giving us our sensation of sound.

"In the case of a single frequency source, the air waves reaching the ear cause the eardrum to vibrate at this same frequency. If now a large number of different frequencies are set up simultaneously (as for example by an orchestra), the air wave corresponding to each particular instrument combines with that of every other instrument to form a single complex wave which, at any instant, is the sum of all the separate waves. This complex wave in turn reaches the ear, and the eardrum vibrating in sympathy with it, gives us our perception of the sound of the orchestra as a whole.

"The combining of the different frequency waves takes place in the air between the source of the sound and the observer's ear. When a microphone is placed at approximately the same location as the observer's ear, it will translate this same complex air wave into its electrical counterpart, and the recording device will preserve this condition for later reproduction.

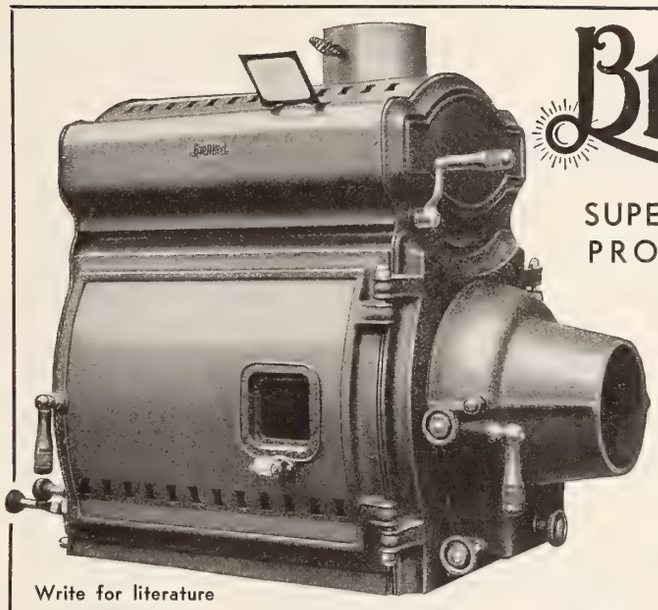
"Please notice that the recorder has not performed any combining of frequencies—this having all been done before the sound reaches the microphone. When the record so made is later reproduced on a good reproducing system, the loudspeaker diaphragm will again convert the amplified electrical wave into an air wave, which is an exact counterpart of the complex air wave that originally reached the observer's ear directly. Upon reaching the ear of a listener this reproduced wave will give the exact equivalent of the original sound vibrations."

INTERESTING PORTABLE SOUND APPARATUS

BY INVITATION of H. C. Frankel, president of the Phototone Equipment Corporation of America of Indianapolis, I went down to the Lincoln hotel in New York City and made an examination of this firm's sound equipment, and witnessed a demonstration of projection, with sound, on two types of this company's equipment.



The Phototone company has portable equipment for both picture projection and sound reproduction. It has a projector which might be termed semi-portable, being designed for use in schools and similar places, and also for use in theatres of limited capacity. This projector is known as the Kolograph model.

Threading it is simple. The projector has 2000-foot magazines and a solid base, considering the weight of the projector. It is equipped with a reflector type arc source. The projector I examined has a front-of-the-lens shutter, but a rear shutter will be supplied if purchaser desires this change.

The light source is automatically controlled. All the necessary adjustments of the light source and mirror may be made conveniently. At the back of the lamphouse is an ammeter. At the front top of the lamphouse is a knob, by means of which the speed with which the carbons are fed together may be governed by the projectionist himself.

The power pack and amplifier is a separate unit about 18 inches square, the sound equipment being very neatly mounted under the projector mechanism. There is a miniature fader, and all those things necessary to the handling of sound. The demonstration of this projector showed good results.

In addition to the semi-portable, I examined the Phototone portable outfit, which is self-contained in a casing about 18 inches square by 10 inches thick. The amplifying element is mounted in the same case with the speaker. All the various necessary controls are mounted on the projector casing, which latter is made of cast aluminum. The total weight of the casing, including the magazines, is 90 pounds. The whole outfit, including casing, speaker, amplifier, etc., weighs only about 220 pounds.

RECTIFIER TUBES: OPERATION AND CARE

just what they do—and what to do if they don't

By J. K. ELDERKIN

RECTIFIERS used in connection with sound systems commonly depend, for their action, upon the principle of the two-element tube. Occasionally, the "dry chemical" type of rectification is employed. Both these devices have the property of conducting current in only one direction. If connected in series with a source of alternating current, a pulsating direct current will pass through.

The rectifier tube carries within itself an ordinary filament, and in addition, a plate. Therefore the tube requires three connections, two for the filament, which are often made by means of a screw-base (similar to the base of an ordinary electric light), and a third for the plate, which often, although not always, consists in a stud of heavy wire mounted at the top of the tube.

When the filament is lighted, negative particles of electricity are emitted from it. These radiate in every direction, but can be attracted by a positive charge. Similarly, they are repelled by a negative charge. If a source of alternating current is connected to the plate, the latter will receive positive and negative charges alternately. Whenever the plate is positively charged, it will attract the negative electricity being radiated from the filament. The passage of these negative particles through the vacuum of the tube amounts, in effect, to a flow of electricity across that vacuum. When, on the next alternation, the plate is charged negatively, the negative particles are repelled from it, and the circuit across the vacuum is opened.

Such a tube is connected in series with an a.c. line, one wire going to either of the filament terminals, and the other going to the plate terminal. (A separate a.c. circuit, of course, is required to light the filament.) The circuit connected across the vacuum of the tube in this way will carry current only half the time (only while the plate is positively charged.) It will carry current in one direction only. A direct current will flow (called pulsating direct because it flows only half the time.)

THE "DRY CHEMICAL" type of rectifier is less well understood. A thin film of copper oxide, or copper sulphide, is deposited upon a disc of copper. Experiment reveals the fact that a copper disc so treated will conduct current in one direction only, and therefore convert, or rectify, alternating into pulsating direct current. The reason for the action, however, is still confused in conflicting theories.

In commercial practice, rectifiers of either type are connected in what is called a full-wave circuit. In such a circuit, the source of the alternating current being the secondary winding of a transformer, the return is to a center-tap, or common tap, in that secondary. One rectifier, whether tube or chemical, is connected in series with each of the two wires leading from the ends of the transformer secondary. Current will flow across each rectifier only half the time, but each will work while the other rests, and vice versa. Since both return through the common wire to the center-tap, a relatively smooth direct current will flow through that common wire.

The advantage of the full-wave circuit is that the direct current obtained, being much smoother, requires less filtering. In addition, because of this increased smoothness, the efficiency of a full-wave circuit is greater than that of two similar rectifiers connected in parallel in an ordinary series circuit.

The pulsating direct current obtained from a rectifier must be filtered, or smoothed, before it is fit for the exacting work of a sound system. The degree of filtering required varies according to the use to which the current is to be put. Direct current for operating relays or exciting speaker fields does not have to be as well filtered as the current used for the filaments of amplifier tubes, some of which are extremely critical to slight irregularities in their supply. The polarizing potential applied to the photoelectric cell must also, when drawn from a rectifier, be extremely well filtered.

Filter circuits are composed of combinations of inductances and condensers. The inductance, a great many turns of wire wound about an iron core, surrounds itself with a magnetic field when current is passed through the wire. When the current is cut off the field of magnetic force shrinks and disappears. If the current flowing is irregular, the strength of the magnetic field varies with each irregularity in the current. A decrease in the strength of the field creates additional current in the wire by inductive action, an increase in field strength deprives the wire of some current to maintain the power of the field. The action of an inductive winding thus tends to keep the current flowing steady at all times, and to smooth out small irregularities.

Condensers are connected across the line. The condenser is a device that passes alternating current, but not direct. Since the fluctuations in the direct current flowing partake, by reason of their irregularity, of the nature of alternating current, they are to some extent short-circuited through the condenser.

An inductance in series with the line, and a condeser across it, form a filter combination. Several such combinations in series may be used to achieve extremely fine filtering.

RECTIFIERS, or rectifying circuits, are used in many parts of the sound system. Commonly, such a circuit is built into each amplifier—and serves the function of providing direct plate current for the amplifier tubes. Where a plate rectifier is built in an amplifier, the tubes used for rectification may be of the same type as the amplifier tubes themselves, the grid (the third element, by means of which tubes amplify) being short-circuited so as not to affect the action. Two-element rectifying tubes may also be used, or dry chemical "stacks" connected for full-wave action. All three methods are common in modern sound systems.

It is seldom, however, that such rectifiers are used to supply direct current for the filaments of amplifier tubes. More commonly, amplifier tube filaments are lighted by a.c., as are the rectifier tubes themselves. In many systems, however, the photoelectric cell amplifier is so critical and sensitive that direct current is necessary for the filments of its tubes. Direct current is also required for the excitation of speaker fields, and in all except a few systems, is used for lighting the exciter lamp. In many of the sound systems installed in earlier days, banks of storage batteries were included to provide direct current for some or all of these purposes, and for various other use, such as microphone current, lighting signal lamps, and operating switching relays. Such batteries were charged, in theatres where no direct current was available by means of a rectifier, conveniently called the charger.

By increasing the power of the charger somewhat, and adding filter circuits to it, it has been found possible to have the charger replace the storage batteries. Rectifiers designed to supply each of the several direct current circuits listed above, as well as combination rectifiers which will feed all of them from a single unit, are now commercially available.

Rectifiers for this purpose need far less attention than batteries—no more in fact, than the system amplifier. They should be checked semi-annually for tight connections, since there is some small vibration in their action, and at the same time dust and dirt should be blown out. Tubes, as in any full-wave or push-pull circuit, should be kept approximately well matched. Where "stacks" are used instead of tubes, these should be inspected at about the same interval—for tight contact between the copper discs. Commonly, a bolt runs through the center of all the discs in one unit, holding them together: the nut at the end of this bolt should be checked with an open-end wrench.

Replacing one or more tubes is the remedy indicated when the rectifier no longer delivers full current. A hum appearing in the sound may be due to a breadown in one of the condensers of the filter circuit. Such a condenser should be replaced. There is almost no other trouble that well-constructed rectifier will cause. In general, these devices give as little trouble as the a.c. battery charger, of which they are no more than a modification.

The test of whether or not a hum heard in the sound may be due to a condenser breakdown in the rectifier, is the simple test of elimination. If the hum is heard from only one projector, it is a simple matter to exchange rectifiers (if separate units are used) or to exchange connections (the case of a combination unit). Such an exchange will indicate quickly enough whether the rectifier or the projector itself is at fault. If the hum is heard from both projectors—and is therefore traceable to the system amplifier, the condensers in the rectifier supplying that amplifier, if one is used, may be replaced. Alternatively, a separate source of supply may be provided for the amplifier temporarily,—from one of the projector rectifiers perhaps, or by use of large 1½-volt dry cells.

Often there will be two condensers in each separate filter circuit, only one of which will be at fault. Where both are found broken down simultaneously, some serious trouble—excess voltage due to some cause—should be suspected. This may be traced with a direct current voltmeter.

Variations in the voltage of the power line will be reflected in variations in the output of the rectifier. Where such power fluctuations are very serious, one may need to adjust the rectifier for proper output.

FOR PROJECTIONISTS

Despite unusual space limitations imposed upon this issue of Better Theatres, it will be noted that the department devoted to projection and allied affairs, Modern Projection, embraces that portion of the publication reaching from Page 25 to Page 55. As calculated in practice, this portion would be designated as that department. However, to ignore all advertising, whether full pages or less, the projection department contains 39 solid columns of reading matter on practical projection and sound affairs. Approximately 25% of this issue is devoted to discussions by experts, written for projectionists.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to "Better Theatres," 1790 Broadway, New York. They will be answered in this department. None will be answered by mail. Although only initials will be used in signing the questions published, it is a requirement that all letters bear the signature and address of their writers. The replies will be prepared personally by Mr. Hulsken, who is a practical architect and a member of the American Institute of Architects.

The Question:

THE WRITER is contemplating the building of a very small theatre, say, to seat possibly 250 in a small town of about 1,500 population. Whether or not we build will depend on how reasonable we can erect this building, and on account of extremely low finances, we must get all we can for as little as we can possibly invest.

In view of this condition I wonder if I may take the liberty to ask you if you have any small plans or suggestions you could offer on this project such as ventilation, acoustics, shape of building, seating, etc., and if not, could you advise us where we might get same without obligating ourselves too severely, because as before stated, we are not sure of whether or not we shall build. Anything you can do to help us out in this situation will be immensely appreciated.—S. C.

The Answer:

I REGRET that you did not state the size of your lot on which you expect to erect your new theatre, but since you state the approximate amount of seats to be 250, the best size for such a theatre should be about between 32 and 35 feet in width. This would give you a center bank of 13 or 14 seats, according to your state or local law requirements. With a wall aisle on each side, it would require about 20 rows, making the length in a good proportion to the width of the interior.

Of course, for such a small theatre no stage will be required but you should provide about a 14-foot apron on which to place the projection screen and horns, provide about 10-feet of space between apron and first row of seats—also an 8-foot foyer, which will make the length of the auditorium 84 feet. To this you must add what you should require for lobby and toilet rooms. The projection room could be located above the lobby. The minimum average height of the auditorium should be 25 feet. This will give you a nicely proportioned auditorium.

Since you want to build this building as cheaply as possible, I suggest a hot air furnace for heating. Your ventilating will be by gravity.

Of course you cannot spend too much money for ornamental plaster, but I suggest you consult with your local architect, and he may be able to juggle some stock patterns in order that he may obtain a pleasing ensemble at a little cost.

From the dimensions I gave you above, a local contractor may be able to give you a pretty close estimate of the cost, but the best method would be to converse with an architect and just have him draw sketches to scale from this information and I am assured that you will not obligate yourself too severely, as you can find out what his charges would be, and if the estimate would be too high and you may have to drop your building plan, the only expense you would have had is the architect's commission for this work, and it is certainly worth that much to find out if you can proceed with your theatre.

If you do proceed, be sure to engage a good decorator, as he certainly can do wonders with a plain, inexpensive theatre. Also, do not forget to purchase nicely designed electric light fixtures, as they also improve the atmosphere in the type of a theatre you expect to build.

The Question:

WE ARE PLANNING on remodeling the auditorium of our employe's club house, in which sound pictures are shown. Would appreciate receiving reliable information from dealers on material suitable for forming a proscenium arch similar to that shown on attached clipping.—F. A. B.

The Answer:

WHILE YOUR inquiry does not really come under the classification of theatres, it is somehow related to it, and therefore I am glad to assist you.

The proscenium arch illustrated in the clipping is built out of ornamental plaster. I presume that you intend to build a platform for projection screen and horns. This platform should be at least 10 feet deep, the floor height of this platform about three feet above your auditorium floor according to the ceiling height.

If your auditorium is of fire-proof construction, the proscenium arch could be built of metal studding, with metal lath or gypsum blocks.

Any plastering contractor has catalogues of ornamental plaster manufacturers on file. In these catalogues you may select stock patterns of varied designs to suit your requirements.

Be sure to select a stock pattern, as this reduces the cost a great deal, as the largest expense of the material is the making of models of which the design is cast.

The Question:

BEING A subscriber, and particularly interested in your department, Planning the Theatre—at present I own a small theatre and would like to lease a new one. The owner gave me a set of plans and I would like to send them to you for an estimate and ideas, and also changes where you see fit.

He promises me, if he can save money in building, it will be much less in rent to pay. The idea occurs to me that a home builder and theatre builder conflict, and this explains why I wish to send these plans to you for your consideration.

I trust that I will not appear selfish in asking this request, but it means a whole lot and I have confidence in your ideas and am willing to abide by same.—L. B.

The Answer:

I SHALL BE very glad to go over the plans of the new theatre which you intend to lease and give you an approximate estimate of the cost of same. Unfortunately your plans have not arrived and this column has to go to the press.

It certainly will be very easy for the owner of the building to save money on construction work at this time, as prices are very low, and by using good judgment the cost can be held down to the minimum.

In my experience of constructing theatres, I have found that there is a great deal of difference in proposals submitted by contractors, and that the theatre contractor can usually save money.

elimination of bangs and noises that frequently resulted in the stop action of lowering and raising a seat.

Instead of cast metal being used in the construction of the modern hinge, regardless of what other metal is used in the construction of the other parts of the chair, steel is best suited for this purpose. The resiliency afforded by the use of steel allows for the flexibility that is required in supporting the weight of the occupant. The constant moving of an individual in a chair causes a reaction to the supporting members, and the flexibility of steel forstalls breakage and distortion in the working parts of the hinges. Another decided improvement in hinge construction is the full compensation factor, which permits the hinge a horizontal movement as well as a vertical one, to permit the seats to be secured to the hinges on the proper radius in the theatre.

The resultant elimination of stresses and strains and the consequent grinding loose of the working parts of hinges, is part of the service that can now be expected by the exhibitor. It must not be overlooked, however, that any one thing mechanical in operation should have periodical attention, hence the best results from seat hinges will depend upon periodical attention in the matter of adjustment and lubrication.

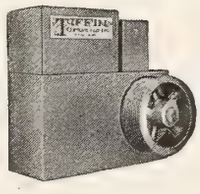
Seats and Cushions

IT IS HIGH testimony to the character of theatregoers who can long survive the discomfort, distraction and exasperation inflicted by some of the seats of chairs now being used in some of our theatres. A wholesome and comfortable posture depends largely upon the manner in which the seat of any chair is constructed. No matter how much care may be exercised in the construction of the back of a chair to obtain the correct curve and the proper line of vision to the screen, chair comfort is futile unless the seat of the chair is properly constructed. A good seat has a pronounced backward slope and carries the body weight wholly on the thicker bands of the thigh muscles. It should not be too long and should have a well rounded front edge. If there is an elevation at the rear of the seat, or if the seat is flat, the occupant slides forward by the force of gravity, losing entirely the relation of the back to the seat.

Since the advent of the talking picture and the increased demands by patrons for added comforts, the suitability of chairs with veneer back and seat has grown less and less, and veneer chairs are mainly confined now to the older small theatres and to rural districts. In like manner, the so-called "squab" or stuffed seat, which represented the first step in the advance of upholstered seats, is gradually becoming relegated to minor usage. It is possible to convert squab seats that are now in use to a spring cushion seat. But without adequate factory and machine facilities it is frequently questionable if this can be accomplished with uniformity. I know of many cases in which, instead of the spring cushion type of seat in replacement of the squab type, new seats of modern construction throughout would have been far more economical in the long run.

While spring cushion seats have been used in theatres of the higher class for a number of years, they are now a requisite to modern theatre seating. Whether it be a box spring seat, spring edge, or deluxe mattress spring seat, the spring seat is swiftly making the other types of seats a matter of historic production.

The box spring seat, the first of the spring type of seat to be developed, derived its significance from the strong box frame that serves its basic construction. This type of seat is generally provided with nine or twelve steel wire springs that are clinched to the bottom board. Burlap covering is drawn tightly over the springs and is tacked securely to the underside of the frame. Most generally the springs are not tied down, but are securely sewed to the burlap, which pulls the springs into proper position when the pressure of the occupant is released.



Over this burlap, as a stuffing or pad, is placed layers of padding material, which is always topped with a layer of genuine cotton. The outside covering, which is most generally of imitation leather, is tacked to the under side of the seat bottom, and a steel reinforcing bottom board is placed over and screwed to the seat bottom, thus strengthening the whole frame and protecting the fastening of the covering material to the seat bottom. This steel bottom board will not sliver, consequently there is no possibility of damage to clothing or hosiery.

The spring edge seat is generally provided with nine or twelve springs arranged in rows of three from front to back, mounted on steel straps about an inch wide and securely tacked to the bottom board. Around the top on the outside, the springs are held in position by a heavy border wire, and in the center, with clips that hold the top of the springs in proper alignment and permit free movement of the springs up and down without bending of the ties. The springs are of different heights from front to rear to give the seat the proper pitch, and the border wire is slightly extended toward the front, which gives this unit the spring effect. Over these springs the padding material is placed and secured to the border wire around the top, and this construction is likewise topped with layers of cotton extending well over the border wire. The operations that follow are similar to that of the box spring seat.

The deluxe mattress spring seat, which is now being used in connection with the more luxurious types of theatre chairs, has 12 or 14 coils of cone type, varying in diameter and gauge of wire. The coil springs are arranged in rows from front to rear, and the lower end is securely fastened to steel straps, which are secured to the wood bottom board. Around the top on the outside, the springs are held in position by a border wire, and in the center with steel clips. Burlap is stitched to the border wire over the springs and stitched andand knotted to the center springs, then drawn down over the spring unit and tacked to the under side of the box bottom. The padding and covering material follow.

Backs of Chairs

THE BACKS of theatre chairs are generally classified as reverse curve, regular curve, or deep curve, and all can be made in varying thicknesses and plies. There are countless numbers of outlines, designs and constructions that are offered, many of which have features and innovations adaptable to special requirements in each theatre, and while the design or outline is a matter of taste, modern comfort demands the spring-constructed and full-upholstered chair back if financially possible.

The relation of the back of any chair to the seat, together with a corresponding correct line of vision to the stage or screen, is far more the concern of the modern seating engineer than the actual construction of the back. Because of the acoustic benefits, this unit is now being obtained with a full upholstered front face covered in a good, sound absorbing fabric, such as velour or mohair. While heretofore the back face of this unit was covered with a veneer panel, leaving sharp edges to sliver and cause damage, these backs are now generally fitted with a steel panel, which completely covers the entire back surface and is secured with oval head screws.

For proper comfort and correct sight lines, the backs of theatre chairs have a pitch or slant in proportion to the requirements of different locations in the theatre. Chairs placed in the balconies generally have backs with a 3½-inch or a 4-inch pitch, whereas the variance on the main floor generally is from 5 to 6½ inches. The backs are sometimes attached directly to the standards at these inclines, then again steel back attachments that give the required pitch to the backs, are frequently used.

The arm rests, and such other wood parts as have not been replaced by steel in the manufacture of modern seating, are still constructed of birch and maple. Birch is used largely in the plywood construction that prevails, because of its beauty and other qualities highly suitable to the production of this particular type of seating.

Without dwelling extensively upon the technical features, this gives a general outline of what constitutes the construction of the modern theatre chair. The article to follow will place this modern chair in the theatre with relation to other chairs and proper seating arrangements, with a discussion of floor construction and proper floor conditioning.

Western Theatre Equipment vs. M. & E. Theatres (3 P. [2d] 1003), it was disclosed that the owner of a theatre purchased certain motion picture sound equipment on a conditional sale contract. The sum of $250 was paid on the purchase price at the time the conditional sale contract was entered into, with the understanding that the balance should be paid on the installment basis. Subsequently the owner of the theatre sold the house to M. & E. Theatres.

The theatre corporation did not orally, or in writing directly, assume obligation to pay for the sound equipment. However, knowing that the equipment was not fully paid for, the theatre corporation paid the seller approximately $950 on the account. Later the theatre corporation sold the theatre building to another party, and in the meantime the equipment disappeared.

The seller of the sound equipment sued the theatre corporation for the balance due, contending that although its officials had not signed a contract to pay for the equipment, yet since certain deposits and payments had been made and, and also because it had kept the equipment in its possession for approximately six months, these acts constituted an implied agreement to assume the obligation under the conditional contract of sale made by the original owner of the theatre.

Although the lower court held the theatre corporation not liable for payment of the equipment, the higher court reversed this verdict, and said:

"The principal question in this case is whether respondent (purchaser) assumed the obligations of the conditional sale contract. . . . It is not necessary that a party should deliberately agree to be bound by the terms of a contract to which he is a stranger, if, having knowledge of such contract, he deliberately enters into relations with one of the parties, which are only consistent with the adoption of such contract. If a person conducts himself in such manner as to lead the other party to believe that he has made a contract his own, and his acts are only explicable upon that theory, he will not be permitted afterwards to repudiate any of its obligations."

Contracts with Illiterates

ANYONE WHO signs a valid contract is liable in damages for failure to fulfill the assumed obligations, unless it is shown that the other party to the contract practiced fraud or misrepresented facts for the purpose of inducing signing of the contract. Moreover, this rule of the law is applicable with respect to illiterate persons who sign contracts without reading the same.

In Sharpless-Hendler vs. Davies (155 Atl. 247), it was shown that an illiterate person signed a valid contract. Later he attempted to avoid liability on the contention that he could not read and did not know the contents of the agreement. Notwithstanding this argument the higher court held the illiterate person bound to perform all obligations assumed under the contract, and said:

"If one party undertakes to read a proposed contract to the other who is incapable of reading, a false reading would be such a plain fraud as to result in the invalidating of the contract. . . . It is a simple case of where an illiterate person, unknown to the other party to be illiterate, chose to affix his name to an agreement without demanding that it be read to him, and without being misled in any way by the other party to it. . . . If one can read his contract, his failure to do so is such gross negligence that it will estop him from escaping its obligations, unless he has been dissuaded from reading it by some trick or artifice practiced by the opposite party. If he cannot read it, it is as much his duty to procure some reliable person to read and explain it to him, before he signs it, as it would be not to read it before he signed it if he were able to do so; and his failure to obtain a reading and explanation of it is such gross negligence as will estop him from avoiding it on the ground that he was ignorant of its contents."

Building Restriction Ordinances

AN IMPORTANT ruling of the law is that any ordinance which restricts the construction and repairs of theatre buildings is void and unenforceable, providing the law gives to either state or city officials unlimited and arbitrary authority to refuse to issue a permit for such construction or repair work.

For instance, in Durand vs. Love (236 N. W. 855), it was disclosed that a city ordinance was enacted which made it unlawful to repair or move wooden buildings located within certain fire limits "without first having obtained from the chairman of the building committee of said Village (a permit) in writing so to do."

Legal controversy arose when the building committee refused to issue a permit to a property owner who desired to repair a wooden building. It is interesting to observe that the higher court held this law void, and said:

EQUIPMENT AFFAIRS

General Equipment News and Comment

VENTILATION DISPLAY

● Next month the American Society of Heating and Ventilating Engineers will hold its second exposition. The event will be conducted this time (the last was held two years ago) in Cleveland, from the 25th to the 29th. It probably is significant that the American Oil Burner Association will have the principal location.

Automatic heating has developed rapidly to the point where it promises greater efficiency in heating at a reduced operating and maintenance cost. The value of automatic heating, particularly with oil (although the gas interests have been working to make their product a strong competitor), is particularly of interest to the theatre field, where great flexibility in control is almost imperative. The exposition will be watched for what it shows the heating and ventilating industry is contributing toward improved methods.

NEW SILENT CHAIN

● An extremely small driving chain, of only a 3/16-inch pitch, has been developed by the Link-Belt Company. It is made in three types—middle guide, side flanged, and duplex. The first two are used where all shafts are driven in one direction, and the latter is employed where reversed direction is desired on one or more shafts, or where special adjustment features are wanted.

PORTABLE UNIT

● A new portable sound reproducing unit for use in exploitation has been developed by the Good-All Electric Manufacturing Company.

The unit is built in a small portable cabinet and is placed in either seat of a car and ready to operate by making one connection to a small portable horn, which hooks over the front bumper. The 110-volt a.c. current supply in the car is furnished by means of a small generator, which is attached to the automobile. When not in use, the tone arm, turntable, microphone, cords, records, etc., all fit inside a portable carrying case.

LENS WIPERS

● Special paper wipers for cleaning lenses have been brought out for the theatre trade by the Howland Company. The papers are of extremely soft, yet tough material (almost cloth-like but apparently more absorbent and smoother). In directing their use, the company also admonishes the projectionist to wash the lenses every two months.

After the lenses have been removed from their mounts, they should be wiped with a fine camel's hair brush. Then washing follows, using soap suds applied with a fine silk sponge. Then the lens should be rinsed and wiped with a rinsed sponge. After drying, the lens wiping tissue is used for polishing. For daily routine, it is recommended that the lens tissue should be used to remove grease, dust and oil.

MERCURY SWITCH

● A mercury type switch has been brought out by Westinghouse, in which contacts are made by the union of two pools of mercury within a refractory chamber. This chamber confines the arc caused by the opening or closing of a circuit. Terminals are tightly sealed, dumetal being used for that portion of the wire going through the glass seal.

A CORRECTION

● In the Fall Buyers Number, in the Who's Who directory, apeared the listing of the National Electric Ticket Company. This firm has been absorbed by the General Register Corporation, general manager of which is J. C. Enslen, former owner of the World Ticket Company.

BY WAY OF NEWS

● A. Bert Ayers has been appointed special factory representative of the Pacent Electric Company of New York, manufacturers of reproducing equipment, besides radio and recording devices. The same company has named Carl Grosswendt production manager, at the Pacent plant in New York.

Here's an item about fast work in response to the inexorable dictum, "The show must go on!" Fire severely damaged the projection room of the Manring theatre in Middlesboro, Ky. While the equipment was still steaming and dripping from the onslaught of fire and firemen (those enemies of fire who can outdo the flames!), D. W. McMillan, Erpi service engineer, was at the theatre. Next to arrive was E. C. Rohr, Indianapolis district superintendent. The work of reconstruction was begun late in the afternoon with the arrival of L. S. Borders, inspector, from St. Charles, 60 miles away. He brought two light apertures and a photoelectric cell. And by the time for the evening performance, the equipment was ready—and the inexorable dictum of show-business was answered once more.

It's a queer thing how even engineers, who otherwise would be—well, just engineers!—get the fever of show-business in their veins. How many stories could be told of the ingenuity and energy amounting to a kind of genius that have answered that mandate, "The show must go on." And now sound engineers are doing it, too!

BETTER THEATRES . . . .

The Backbone of Many Sales Programs

In good times and bad you'll find the leading theatre equipment manufacturers represented in BETTER THEATRES' advertising pages. Their choice of BETTER THEATRES was a principal factor in attaining leadership. Their persistence maintains their front position.

The type of business man who holds down sales costs by getting highest value for his sales-dollar makes BETTER THEATRES the backbone of his selling program. Dominant advertising in the dominant publication serving the theatre field is the one invariable rule he follows.

We do not claim that it is the only way to supremacy, but the facts prove that unremitting advertising in BETTER THEATRES is the one indispensable requirement no matter what other methods may be used.

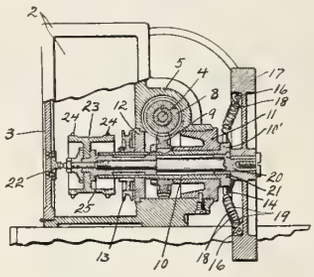
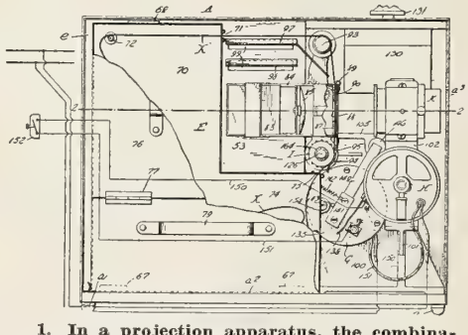
New Inventions . . . illustrated descriptions of devices related to motion pictures and allied crafts, recently published by the U. S. government and selected for Better Theatres by William N. Moore, patent specialist of Washington, D. C.

1,777,418. SYNCHRONIZED PHOTOGRAPHY AND SOUND. Harrison W. Rogers, New York, N. Y. Filed Oct. 29, 1927. Serial No. 229,598. 3 Claims. (Cl. 88—16.2.)



1. The combination with a motion picture machine and a sound recording-reproducing machine having a turntable, of two sets of film controlled switches, one set for starting and the other for stopping said turntable, a starting and a stopping electrical device for said turntable controlled by said switches, and means controlled by each film controlled switch, whereby the closing of one switch energizes its electrical device and de-energizes the electrical device of the other switch.

1,768,063. INDICATOR FOR MOTION-PICTURE-PROJECTION APPARATUS. Michael Hoffman, Brooklyn, N. Y. Filed Mar. 30, 1927. Serial No. 179,524. 1 Claim. (Cl. 88—16.2.)



In an apparatus of the character described, the combination of a sound reproducing machine having a disk record operated in synchronism with motion picture projecting apparatus, an indicator operatively connected with the reproducer arm of said sound reproducing machine for synchronous movement and adjustment therewith and mounted for movement over a longer range than the reproducer, and a chart having indications of the pictorial features being projected mounted on the sound reproducing machine adjacent the path of movement of and with which said indicator cooperates to give visual indication of an enlarged scale of the picture projection relative to the sound reproduction.

1,777,682. COMBINED MOTION-PICTURE AND SOUND CAMERA. Earl I. Sponable, New York, N. Y., assignor to Fox Case Corporation, New York, N. Y., a Corporation of New York. Filed Nov. 12, 1927. Serial No. 232,818. 3 Claims. (Cl. 88—16.2.)

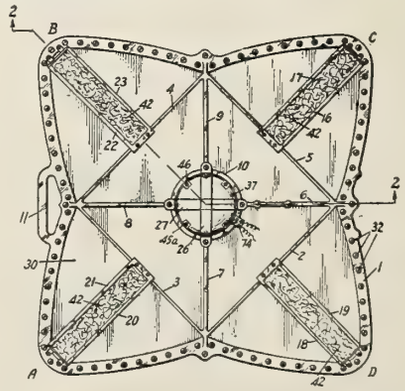
1,771,509. OPTICAL PROJECTION APPARATUS. Harvey N. Ott, Buffalo, N. Y., assignor to Spencer Lens Company, Buffalo, N. Y. Filed Mar. 21, 1925. Serial No. 17,393. 22 Claims. (Cl. 88—28.)



1. In a projection apparatus, the combination of a mechanism for intermittently displaying different pictures, electric means for actuating said mechanism, means for interrupting the supply of electric current to said electric means when said mechanism is displaying a picture to interrupt further action of said mechanism, and means operable at will to supply electric current momentarily and separately from the interrupting means to said electric means to cause said mechanism to start an operation to display another picture.

1,777,805. APPARATUS FOR THE PROJECTION OF LIGHT. Leslie Robert Morshead, London, England. Filed Jan. 3, 1930. Serial No. 418,375, and in Great Britain Dec. 29, 1928. 4 Claims. (Cl. 240—3.)

4. An apparatus for the projection of light, more particularly for spot and flood lighting and like purposes, comprising a casing, an optical projection system carried thereby for projecting a converging beam of high intensity having a crossing point, a light tube receiving said beam and embodying telescopic sections, one adjustable toward and from said optical projection system, a diaphragm having an aperture, said aperture being within said light tube, thereby preventing light losses around the diaphragm, and a refracting lens carried by the adjustable section of the light tube whereby the lens is adjustable with relation to the optical projection system and whereby the diaphragm is rendered variable as to position between the optical projection system and lens.

1,771,318. SOUND REPRODUCER. Vesper Anderson Schlenker, Orange, N. J. Filed Feb. 6, 1928. Serial No. 252,194. 18 Claims. (Cl. 181—31.)

14. A sound reproducer for voice and music comprising a relatively large vibratile diaphragm having a periphery in the form of intersecting parabolic curves having a common focus and having axis at right angles to provide a diaphragm having an axis of symmetry, means for propagating vibration waves therein in a direction radially outward from said focus and damping material associated therewith in the path of reflected waves and along the axis of symmetry of sail diaphragm.

"No qualifications or standard of building proper to be removed nor conditions or restrictions on the discretion of the chairman to grant or deny such permits are provided. . . . It thus appears to have been the intention, as it is the obvious construction, that the authority attempted to be conferred on the chairman by section 8 was unlimited and arbitrary."

Holding Company Liability for Taxes

GENERALLY SPEAKING, a corporation is liable for payment of income taxes if it takes possession of a theatre building and operates the same at a profit.

For example, in the recent case of Hatch vs. Morosco Holding Company (50 F. [2d] 138), a theatre holding company was held liable for payment of income taxes on income derived from operation of a theatre, where the testimony indicated that the holding company had possession of and control over the theatre operator's lease on the theatre.

In this case it was shown that the Morosco Theatre Company acquired the interest in a lease of premises known as the Morosco theatre. The term of the lease was to run until May 31, 1927, and the rental was $40,000 per year. The company was obligated to pay taxes, assessments, water rentals and insurance. The lease contained an agreement against assignment or subletting. In April, 1921, the Morosco Holding Company was organized for the purpose of taking title to the stock of the theatre company. Upon its organization the holding company took possession of the leased premises, though no assignment or sublease was executed by the theatre company, and thereafter it used the theatre until the expiration of the term in 1927 for the giving of theatrical productions for their own profit.

The theatre company failed to pay income taxes for the years 1919 and 1920 and suit was filed by the government against the holding company to collect the sum of $36,668. It was contended by the counsel for the holding company that the latter should not be liable for payment of the taxes because the theatre company's property had not been legally transferred to the holding company. However, it is important to know that under the circumstances the court held the holding company liable for payment of the taxes, and said:

"The appellant (holding company) contends that there was no 'transfer' to the holding company, and hence Section 280 is inapplicable. It is true that neither a formal assignment of the lease, nor any sublease of the premises, was executed by the theatre company; but at least there was a transfer of possession. Physical occupation of the premises passed to the holding company. The purpose of Section 280 is to authorize a more efficient method of tax collection in circumstances where independently of that section the government might proceed by suit against one who had obtained property of the taxpayer. The inquiry, therefore, should not be whether there was a technical transfer of title, but whether property of the taxpayer was so dealt with as to make the holding company liable at law or in equity to the government as a creditor of the taxpayer."

The decision was based upon Section 280 of the Revenue Act of 1926, which authorizes the United States government to collect taxes from a purchaser of property or a business received from a seller who had failed to pay such taxes.

Required to Keep Floors Clean

A THEATRE owner and his employes are expected by the law to exercise care to observe any dangerous substance, or object, which may be upon a theatre floor or passageway and likely to result in injury to a patron. So held a higher court in the late case of Hatfield vs. Roberts (160 S. E. 537). Here it was shown that there was a slope from the front door to the sidewalk. The surface of the entrance was slick, because it was not scarred or roughened, and it was not lighted. The proprietor had permitted a banana peeling to remain in the entrance for an unreasonable length of time. A patron who was walking through the entrance stepped upon the banana peeling, slipped and was seriously injured. Suit was filed against the proprietor on the grounds that both himself and his employes were negligent in failing to remove the banana peeling within a reasonable period of time.

In holding the injured patron entitled to recover damages, the court explained that it is the duty of a proprietor to keep passageways clear of dangerous substances, such as a banana peeling and other objects, which may result in injury to patrons, and that permitting such objects to remain on the floor an unreasonable period of time, as several hours, is negligence.

Irregularity of Flooring

ANOTHER IMPORTANT point of the established law is that a theatre owner is bound to exercise ordinary care to illuminate or otherwise warn patrons of any irregularity in the floor or flooring of the theatre. Otherwise, if a patron is injured and proves that he was unfamiliar with the irregularity in the floor, he may recover damages for the injuries sustained.

Also, it is important to know that this rule of the law is applicable with respect to a floor, or other part of the theatre building, which is in the course of construction.

For illustration, in Ely vs. Hahne, (156 Atl. 468), it was shown that a patron was seriously injured when she tripped and fell over a small ledge which was formed by a contractor in the course of repairing the floor. She sued the proprietor to recover damages. During the trial testimony was introduced showing that originally the entire floor being of wood, the proprietor had contracted with a company to cover this flooring with marbleoid. This recovering had been completed to the point where the accident occurred and at this point there was a fall of two inches between the marbleoid already in place and the uncovered wooden floor. When the patron stepped from the marbleoid to the wooden floor she fell.

The counsel for the proprietor argued that he was not negligent in failing to warn the patron of the construction work, since it was plainly evident to any person who walked into the building that the repair work was being done. However, on account of the fact that the contractor was not performing the work at the time the injury was sustained, and therefore it may not have been apparent that the floor was only partly constructed, the lower court held the injured patron entitled to recover heavy damages and the higher court upheld this verdict, saying:

"Here the floor was undergoing repair, and in the course of that repair and while in an incompleted state, a drop of two inches from the marbleoid floor to the uncovered wooden floor had been left without guard or warning to those invited to enter. The purpose was to cover the whole floor and when completed to provide an even level on which to walk."

Patron Has Burden of Proof

VARIOUS COURTS have held that a theatre owner is not liable in damages for injuries resulting to a patron, unless the testimony clearly indicates that the former or his employes were negligent in producing the thing causing the injury, or that the theatre owner or his employes had information of the dangerous condition and failed within a reasonable time to repair it.

For instance, in the recent case of Torbet vs. Wool, (238 N. W. 140), it was shown that a patron slipped on the floor and was seriously injured. She sued the proprietor to recover damages and contended that the injury resulted from the fact that oil placed upon the floor left the same in a slippery condition.

During the trial considerable testimony was given by both the proprietor and the injured patron. The latter endeavored to prove that the floor was slippery and oily at the time of the injury, whereas the proprietor introduced testimony showing that the night previous to the injury an absorbing compound had been sprinkled on the floor and swept therefrom for the purpose of eliminating excess oil.

Although the patron proved that considerable oil existed at the spot where she fell, the higher court held the proprietor not liable in damages.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 105, No. 13 December 26, 1931

ORIENTAL EXCITEMENT

THIS week the middlewest and Chicago's showland is agog over the fact that Balaban & Katz have boldly and spectacularly inserted George Gershwin's "Girl Crazy," uncut and completely transplanted from the "legitimate" Garrick, into a picture-and-stage show bill at the Oriental, big Loop house of the Publix circuit. The picture component and the stage attraction each consume ninety minutes, thus entertainment is being purveyed at 25 cents an hour. Half of that entertainment opened to Chicago at a top of $4.40.

Despite the excitement over this stroke, and regardless of what its success may be as a Chicago Loop box office expedient, it will remain just that, a Loop box office expedient. In terms of show merchandising, as a practice, it must be classified in the same category with the double feature bill. It sets no paces and establishes no tide marks for the industry.

Presently, what with the struggles of the last standers of the stage, we shall likely see, here and there, more of this sort of experiment. It merely means, which observers with perspective have long known, that the motion picture with the coming of sound became the amusement industry. The stage is an appendage of the talking motion picture.

The talking motion picture is the machine tool of dramatic expression. The die hards will contend that hand made drama is another art, but it is not. Neither is it another business. The future relation to the mechanized amusement industry is likely to prove something like that of the handmade motor car to the American motor industry. The handmade car is smart, sophisticated and exclusive—but not quite as good a mechanism as the best Detroit product, and much more costly. The drama of the old stage, in the mass market, is like that.

Despite the excitement of our CHICAGOAN contributor, Mr. Weaver, very little history is being made at the Oriental.

FIRST 24-SHEET

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S archeological research expedition—all big institutions have their research expeditions these days—reports in breathless cabled haste that it has discovered on the walls of a newly excavated ruin of Herculaneum the first showman's advertisement, reading:

THE TROOP OF GLADIATORS OF THE AEDILE
WILL FIGHT ON THE THIRTY-FIRST OF MAY
THERE WILL BE FIGHTS WITH WILD ANIMALS
AND AN AWNING TO KEEP OFF THE SUN

This is what might be termed simple announcement copy, although the line on the awning may indicate that it was still a bit of an innovation of showmanship. These many centuries later, however, that old stuff still has its pulling power. Some way, one feels that it was a good show, rain or shine. There was no bunk about it, in those days. A fight was a fight. It is to be observed that the advance man who billed his circuit of Rome, Pompeii and Herculaneum did not waste his time and space with a lot of adjectives, and his Latin contained plenty of them.

It is a mere footnote to the considerations of showmanship here-in, but it is worth mentioning in passing that more recent examinations of the records prove that Mark Antony's real start was as Caesar's public relations counsel, and that Caesar's finish began when he fell out with Antony about publicity.

COCKEYED EDITOR

MORE in sorrow than in anger, we discover the "Daily News" of New York in a most grievous error of accusation against the motion picture industry. Usually this journal is more than friendly to the screen, but some editorial writer with acute strabismus, or maybe only astigmatism, hastily read a Broadway newspaper the other day and alighted with ghoulish glee on a list of the eliminations made by RKO theatres from the lines of various vaudeville acts and proceeded thereupon to lay the whole matter in the lap of the "talkie industry." For the information of the "Daily News" it may be well for someone to write the editor a note with a diagram elucidating the difference between the business of producing and presenting vaudeville acts and the business of producing and presenting motion pictures. The screen, the world knows, has troubles of its own, and we cannot have careless journalism presenting us with responsibility for the sins of vaudeville gag men. The "Daily News" editorial likely as not will be embalmed presently in some reformer's screed or speech and then become a part of the accumulated tradition of original sin in the cinema. Thus is the repute of the screen made.

SCIENTIFIC ADJUDICATION

THE Bureau of Standards, which guards our platinum meter bar in Washington, tests hotel china and does other utilitarian chores, has just reached a sound decision. It holds that it is less annoying to live next door to a saxophone player than a tap dancer. The findings unfortunately contain no suggestion about how to make the change, legally.

THE AUDIENCE HAS GROWN UP

EVEN Ohio is beginning to discover that the motion picture has responsibilities other than to the tender infant mind. Dr. Beverly O. Skinner, head of the Ohio censor board, in an address the other day said a survey by the board indicated that only 3 per cent of the audiences were made up of children below high school age. Dr. Skinner was generous enough to remark, too, that modern books and magazines had a more potent effect on public morals than the motion picture.

WHAT THE PRESS SAYS

CLASSIC

THE TIMES of ST. LOUIS discusses the reissue, in sound, of "Ben Hur," saying:

First of all it brings back a story that has lasted and will last a long time in book form. It returns to us a drama that was for years an attraction, with flesh and blood players, playing season after season to packed houses. . . . The second suggestion is that producers will inevitably return to the tested offerings of the past. . . .

"LIVE & MOVE"

Writing in the DAILY MIRROR of NEW YORK, Edward Orleans, columnist, comes to the defense of the more sophisticated drama of the screen, thus:

The "Hollywood influence," it would seem, has encountered stern opposition in London and certain other English cities that can take their "cinemas" or leave them.

Justice A. R. Cairns, of the Southwestern Police Court, epitomized the matter for a correspondent of the London Methodist Times lately.

Said the Magistrate:

"We are living in an era of dirt, and the pictures exploit it and thrive on it. Their highest idea of romance is infidelity. Marital loyalty is the hallmark of imbecility. The husband who trusts his wife is a halfwit; and the wife who trusts her husband deserves to be deceived, and is an object for hilarity.

"Filth has become in most of our picture houses and many of our theatres the hallmark of amusement, and self-control the brand of the coward. I do not hesitate to say that Hollywood is earning a distinction second only to Gomorrah."

It would be interesting to know the age and the general physical aspect of Justice Cairns. From the way he talks he and Queen Victoria, of lamented memory, must have been born in the same year.

The world changes, and we change with it. Admittedly, many of our modern pictures are not intended for juvenile consumption. For the function of the player is "to hold the mirror, as 'twere up to nature."

We see drama, bitter tragedy, duplicity and deceit, as well as heroic sacrifice and self-abnegation in the modern picture. We see things that perhaps have actually happened—hundreds of times.

Dreiser lifted "An American Tragedy" bodily out of the newspaper reports of a pitifully sordid murder trial, and with true Dreiserian touch made it epic.

Vina Delmar has sliced a cross section of palpitating life in "Bad Girl," a really beautiful and human play.

"Street Scene," in many of its familiar aspects, has happened scores of times—right around the block from where we live.

And, while we shouldn't care particularly to take our twelve-year-old daughter to see "Anna Christie," "The Fall and Rise of Susan Lenox," "The Sin of Madelon Claudet," "Are These Our Children?" "Devotion," "A Free Soul" and dozens of other splendid pictures, nevertheless these films are thrilling entertainment for anyone between the ages of sixteen and one hundred and sixty.

They are real. They live and move. They have "organs and dimensions." They are fascinating. So let's continue to have them. We'll send the kids to see "Huckleberry Finn," "Tom Sawyer" and "Penrod."

And then we'll all be happy.

STAGE and MASSES

THE ENQUIRER of CINCINNATI gives editorial recognition to important elements of strength of the motion picture as entertainment keyed to the age and its economics, with a side consideration of the stage, thus:

The legitimate stage has been struggling along for years against the youthful strength of the movie, competing on the traditional basis of the theatre of history with the ultra-modern motion picture. Quite apart from considerations of art and taste, the movie has all the logic on its side.

It is a creation of our mechanical age. It can be produced only at great cost, but, once produced, it is sold in thousands of theatres for a low admittance price. Thus, under mass-production methods, the motion picture has become one of the Nation's largest industries, and the legitimate has almost gone the way of the stage coach.

But there remains a demand for the theatre. Men and women still want to see individuals come before them on the stage and act their parts without the intervention of mechanics. There is a genuineness about seeing actors themselves, about knowing that each performance is unique, in some detail or many.

This constitutes a problem in economics. How to make use of the motion picture's mass-production advantages and yet retain the vigor and distinction of the legitimate play? One experiment being tried in Chicago possibly may supply the answer.

There a musical comedy, fresh from Broadway, has been moved into a movie theatre, to become a part of the program, four times a day, sandwiched between showings of the feature film. Instead of paying three to five dollars for the musical show alone, the public can have it and a movie program also for thirty-five to seventy-five cents. That is how mass production works.

It remains to be seen how long musical comedy personnel can stand up under the rigors of the four-a-day and how the public will respond to the new undertaking. Economically, it seems a hopeful experiment. Artistically, it will have to prove its worth.

AN EXHIBITOR friend in Nampa, sends us a clipping from the editorial page of the IDAHO STATESMAN, discussing the box office conditions of the day, and saying:

And who can blame the public? Mothers and fathers will take their families to the theatre when they can be certain the entertainment is wholesome. The public has tired of this flood of sex sophistication, stories of gangsters who kill for recreation, of men and women who break the laws of man and God and who are glorified for their misdeeds.

COPYRIGHT VIOLATION PENALTY IS LESS DRASTIC UNDER HEBERT BILL

And Copyrighted Material of Producers-Distributors Is Given Greater Protection; Will Irwin Calls Bill Best Yet

Less drastic penalties for film copyright infringements by exhibitors and greater safeguards of the copyrighted material of producers-distributors are provided in the Senate bill on copyright revision authored by Senator Hebert of Rhode Island, chairman of the Senate patents committee.

Both exhibitors and distributors approve the measure, according to Senator Hebert and the Authors' League, one of the most important sponsors of the measure. Will Irwin, chairman of the copyright committe of the Authors' League, describes the bill as the most favorable legislation in that field that the exhibitors may hope for.

"Holdovers" Change Important

Probably the most important change in the Hebert bill is in relation to "holdovers," the provisions for which in both the earlier Hebert bill and in the Vestal bill, which has been reintroduced in the House, were vigorously opposed by exhibitors. Allied States Association, in particular, has opposed the fixing of arbitrary penalties for unauthorized exhibitions, and has sought to have infringements of that kind defined as breaches of contract, rather than infringements of copyright.

While sponsors of the bill and the Senate committee on patents see little likelihood of such a definition being given, their favorable disposition toward a lessening of penalties for infringement is evidenced in the reduction of the minimum penalty from a proposed $250 to one of $50, where "innocent" infringement can be shown. The minimum penalty provided in the Vestal bill is $100.

Penalty Provision Altered

Complete elimination of the penalty, as asked by exhibitors, might be construed, the Senate committee is reported to believe, as involving setting the terms of a contract, which is outside the realm of legislation. For that reason, it was said, the committee failed to act in accordance with exhibitors' wishes in revising the Hebert bill, inserting, instead, amendments which distinguish between "guilty" and "innocent" infringements with corresponding lighter penalties for the latter. In addition, the committee further amended the bill by eliminating the arbitrary damages recoverable in cases of infringement and supplanting them with revised damage limitations to be administered in the judgment of the court in relation to actual damages suffered.

This latter provision of the Hebert bill is interpreted by its sponsors as further favoring "innocent" parties to unauthorized exhibition. In application, they say, a court could not award damages to plaintiffs which were in excess of the actual loss suffered, which, in the case of holdovers would correspond to actual loss of rentals due to the holdovers.

The recoverable damage for "innocent" infringement applies alike to one or more unauthorized exhibition under the Hebert bill. Thus a damage award may be as little as $50 and not more than $2,500, as compared with the present recoverable damages of from $250 to $5,000 for each unauthorized performance with no distinction made between "innocent" and "guilty" infringement.

In the case of provable "guilty" infringement, damages recoverable are not less than $100 and not to exceed a total sum of $10,000 for all infringements of a copyright up to the date of institution of suit.

In addition, the Hebert bill provides that no damages may be recovered by a plaintiff, even in the case of "guilty" infringement, unless the material used has been registered in Washington as provided in the bill. In such cases, the plaintiff's only remedy would be injunction.

Music Tax Involved

A second major objection of exhibitors to former copyright measures involves the music tax, or licensing of copyrighted material. The Hebert bill has avoided specific reference to the music tax, as such, and under its provisions there is little likelihood of any vital changes resulting in the amount of the tax as now collected. The Senate committee on patents rendered the opinion that this subject also was a contractual one in which the law has no interest. The Hebert bill gives the copyright owner exclusive use of his copyright, and if permission to use the work is granted by him to others, the committee opined, it must be by mutually agreeable arrangement, and therefore a contract results, the terms of which cannot be set by legislation.

Registration of a full story, manuscript, scenario or comprehensive synopsis is provided for in the bill and is looked upon favorably by producers. If the Hebert bill became law, under its provisions for registration a producer would be given clear title to any work purchased for production without fear of later complications. With the story registered in Washington, suits for damages filed against producers by authors who contend that material or ideas of theirs were appropriated without authorization would be quickly decided without recourse, even, to the courts if the claims were not meritorious.

Fairest Plan, Says Irwin

"The complaints and petitions of exhibitors, relative to copyright revision," said Will Irwin, "have been carefully investigated. As a result, we are convinced that it is the fairest legislation which can be devised for them. We feel that if exhibitors were to read the bill carefully they would beg their representatives not to disturb the new amendments to the Hebert bill.

"These amendments include everything that legislation can do in the way of satisfying their requests for copyright revision. When exhibitors ask for more than this, we can only believe that they are confused on how much can be done by legislation. Lawmakers, it should be obvious, cannot set the terms of a contract, therefore, it is quite impossible to say how much a music tax shall be and what contractual definition a 'holdover' shall carry. These are purely matters to be worked out between owners of copyright and exhibitors, and between exhibitors and distributors."

Distinguishes Between Innocent and Guilty Infringement and Removes Arbitrary Penalties, Says Chairman of Committee

Reduces Damages

Summarizing the benefits of the Hebert bill amendments to exhibitors, Irwin said that, in its present form, the bill reduces damages for infringements to a new low minimum, that it stipulates a total maximum damage for all violations instead of for each violation, as under present law, that it distinguishes between innocent and guilty infringement, and that it removes arbitrary penalties and leaves their naming to the court, and stipulates that such penalties shall be in accordance with a "fair and reasonable license value."

"The bill has the support of many important factors within the motion picture industry," Irwin continued. "Its only serious opposition appears to be inspired by the radio interests—for what reason we are not aware. The present law is as antiquated as an ox-cart. It dates to the age of Queen Anne, and in the course of its numerous years has been amended by every country but the United States and Siam. New laws have been in use elsewhere for the past 35 years."

Delayed by Filibuster

The amendments contained in the Hebert bill as reintroduced at this session were agreed upon in the Senate committee on patents in the closing days of the last session. It was passed handily by the House but a five-day filibuster stopped it in the Senate. It is reported that had it been permitted to come to a vote, not more than 12 votes would have been cast against it.

The Vestal bill, also reintroduced in the House at this session, bears the bulk of industry opposition, being particularly opposed by exhibitors generally.

As yet, the Senate patents committee has not organized for this session, and the Hebert bill, therefore, has been given no new consideration as yet. The patents committee, it is expected, will meet some time after the Christmas holidays for the purpose of making up a program, on which the Hebert bill will be given a prominent place, and hearings will probably be held early next year.

Club Set For New Year's Eve

The Motion Picture Club, in New York, will hold its annual New Year's Eve party at the club headquarters. Midnight dinner, dancing and entertainment will be part of the program, for which numerous notables in the industry have reserved tickets.

FULL STAGE PLAY ADDED TO FILM BILL IN THREE-HOUR B & K SHOW

Each Part of Program at the Oriental Consumes Exactly Ninety Minutes, Or At the Rate of 25 Cents An Hour

Balaban and Katz is undertaking the experiment this week of presenting a stage play in full in addition to the regular screen fare at the Oriental in Chicago. William R. Weaver, editor of The Chicagoan and a veteran writer for the film business press, comments on the B & K innovation.

Draw a circle around December 18 in your date book. On that day George Gershwin's "Crazy Girl" was written into theatre history over the bold, flowing Balaban & Katz signature as the first major stage production to be booked uncut into a major cinema to split program time with an uncut film bill at uninflated admission prices. That's history.

Theatre theorists have toyed with the idea for years. Balaban & Katz, responsible for many important innovations in theatre management since 1914, have put it to practical test. This is written before final returns are in, but early voters for the proposition are buying ballots in such numbers as to leave no doubt about their sentiment in the matter. It's a go.

(Latest returns at press time indicated success of the experiment unquestioned for the first week, though the bill thus far had failed to submerge the records of strong programs such as those which included Duke Ellington and Ted Lewis.—Ed.)

Conditions were perfect for the experiment. That is, the time, place and production were right for a trial that would determine positively the merits of the policy. The week before Christmas week is box office ebb tide in downtown Chicago. The Oriental, built for meteoric Paul Ash and never consistently healthy since he burned out grosses up or down in direct ratio to the strength of individual attractions, enjoys less fixed habitual patronage than any other local Publix house. "West of Broadway," the John Gilbert-Lois Moran selection for the week, is precisely par for the Oriental course. An ideal spot for the try-out.

In the opposite corner, "Girl Crazy" had opened big at the Garrick for $4.40 ringside. When the annual shopping spree began to cut in, the management had run in a second string cast with Gregory Ratoff and Vivian Janis batting ("This is Graham McNamee speaking") for Benny Rubin and Blossom Seeley. At this point the extension of half-rate ticket privileges, an old Chicago custom, had reduced the net admission price to $2.20. Which doesn't mean that the show was a flop. The cast still counted 92 and the stands were still as comfortably filled as any other pre-holiday stands in the city.

What, then, everybody wanted to know, would happen when the Oriental made good its promise, published on every Publix screen in town, to bring "Girl Crazy" to the Oriental "intact" as a stageshow (Ted Lewis had officiated the two weeks preceding) at no advance in admissions? This is what did.

Morning line odds were about 2-1 to win. The early birds who wait for the wicket to open gave Randolph street a pre-war eyeful. The afternoon performances, run off at the usual matinee prices, did more business than the toy department at Marshall Field's around the corner. Your informant inquired at 8:15 and was told he might get in 30 minutes later, wherefore he crossed to the United Artists and went "Around the World in Eighty Minutes" with Douglas Fairbanks. Returning at 9:35, he caught the film-end break-up and plunged his way to first down on the 22-yard line, his interference and life-partner carrying on to a seat directly back of the organ console and the tympani.

"Girl Crazy" started at 8:37, screen announcement substituting for printed program. The show opens slow and with much conversation, building speed and interest through six scenes, three to each of the two acts. Gershwin's song numbers, most of which have been community-sung to complete familiarity in this and other cinemas, keep principals and chorus busy most of the time. Between them, Ratoff's Russian idea of a Germano-Hebraic comedian elected sheriff of a quick-triggered Western cow town holds attention of cast and audience. A laconic and somewhat too quiet quartet masks scene changes with "Bidin' My Time" and "I Got Rhythm" and knots proceedings for a couple of encores.

All this occupies 90 minutes as clocked. The film program runs exactly as many, giving a grand total of three hours—at 25 cents per hour after 6 o'clock and something less before—and a grand holiday package of entertainment for any and all buyers.

Thus the credit side. There is a debit side, of course, although the slight corrections required to eliminate it will have been made by now. For one thing, the actors have to be taught to speak up if their lines are to carry to the back rows of a bigger theatre than they are accustomed to. For another, the intermission must be eliminated. Attempt was made to bridge it by projecting the lyrics of first-act songs on the screen for all to sing, but two or three hundred innocents tried to enjoy their habitual entre-act cigaret in the foyer and a like number of veteran cinema-goers, trained in catching a seat as catch can, made the most of their inexperience. Balaban & Katz will fix that.

That's the record. If you care for prophecy—and it's been a rotten year for it—mine is that this marks the beginning of a theatre era quite likely to date from now on. Without straining imagination the merest trifle, I can visualize the opening of Mr. Ziegfeld's "Follies" and Mr. White's "Scandals" and Mr. Carroll's "Vanities" and all of their kind at the New York Paramount in connection with a standard film program and as the first stand in a cross-country season that will take them to San Francisco by way of all the key cities (and maybe some that are not key) and to the box office glory of the theatres therein. I can picture the socalled legitimate stage giving up the musical comedy ghost, perhaps not without a struggle, but no less surely, and confining itself to those things it can so much better produce and house. I'd like to speculate on the effects of this fore and aft, its influence upon picture theatres and stage theatres and entertainment and society and all the rest of it, but I know you'd rather do that your own way and so I'll not. But draw that circle around December 18 just the same. That day something happened.

Idea Toyed With by Theorists For Years Is Given Practical Demonstration in the House Originally Built For Paul Ash

Hammons Strikes At Double Bill Evil

The picture industry cannot recover even when prosperity returns, until it eliminates double featuring, E. W. Hammons, Educational president, declared this week, in an attack on the practice.

He assailed it as violating the principles of showmanship, and termed it the greatest evil the industry has ever known, and in a statement made to Motion Picture Daily he said:

"Already many leaders in the industry have pledged their support of a campaign against the evil of the double feature program, and this coming year should see every effort exerted in this direction," Hammons said. "The theory has definitely turned into fact—that it has been working in a vicious cycle. The practice has created an artificial shortage of product, with the result that a considerable amount of inferior product (altogether inconsistent with the progress made in producing fine entertainment) has been dumped on the market. This has been undermining the good will of the public, hurting the exhibitor as well as the producer.

"From its very inception I have deplored the double feature policy as a dangerous substitute for the well-balanced program. The danger has become a menace."

THEATRE MUST ADJUST TO SUPPLY NOT DEMAND, GOLDWYN INSISTS

Producer Raises His Voice in a Defense of Hollywood and Its "Miracle" Performances and Its Night-and-Day Labor

While there can be no denial of Mr. Goldwyn's assertion that the exhibition mechanism of the industry must not outgrow the product, it is germane to the topic to observe that exhibition and the theatres have always been a component of importance in the development of the industry—if not the art. Producers moved from roof tops and backyards to studio when the nickelodeon created the machine by which the public could express its motion picture demand. Stable, substantial production institutions grew up alongside of and step by step with exhibition. Intemperate and artificial growth on either side has ever met with the inevitable processes of inhibition imposed on all organisms. The pulpy "watersprouts" of late summer always "winter kill." The creative force is in the studio, the nourishing force is the public expressing itself at the box office. The theatre belongs to and works for the public not the producer. Ultimately there will be all the production the public can absorb through the theatre. The soil ordains the career of the forest—there are usually too many seeds, anyway.

TERRY RAMSAYE

Samuel Goldwyn, aggressive and active among the producers of Hollywood and as a founder and observer of the "Hollywood scene" from the beginnings of the dramatic motion picture, is vigorously displeased with the light in which that creative community is being shown to the world.

Mr. Goldwyn has come to Broadway with his "Arrowsmith" and the while is sojourning for a few weeks at the Waldorf, where he has caught up with his reading, and finds a deal in print about Hollywood upon which he will comment when provoked. Hollywood, he says, is doing very well, miraculously well, all conditions and circumstances considered.

"However," it was tentatively suggested, "Mr. Goldwyn, there seems to be a rumor about that all is not well in the industry. What do you think is the matter in Hollywood, or wherever it may be?"

"First," Mr. Goldwyn remarked in reply, "is the fact that there are in Hollywood about three hundred and fifty newspaper people, representing nearly every important publication in the world. They just have to write something. And the newswriters are like many other workers, they catch on to a theme song and sing it until it is worn out. A story or a line of copy about Hollywood tends to be repeated until it is all over the world.

"Second," he resumed, "the whole of the motion picture business, just like other businesses, must undergo, and is undergoing, readjustments. Hollywood knows it, and I expect Hollywood knows it better than any other branch of the industry. It is a world condition affecting all business. It is not something brought on by Hollywood.

"The reorganization of the business of making pictures due to the coming of sound had hardly found its feet when the world depression came along. That the motion picture producing community has delivered as well as it has, with a practically new medium, under world conditions as they are, with two sets of problems, its own and the reactions to the problems of the rest of the world, is certainly a miracle. A good job is being done and it will get better.

"Third, there must be a new conception, or rather a correction of a more recent conception of what this business is about. The whole industry must come to the realization that it is a picture business, that it was the picture which built the theatre and that it is only the picture that can maintain the theatre. It must be realized once again that the business starts in Hollywood and goes thence to the box office market, not from the market back to Hollywood.

"The ultimate readjustment will find the motion picture business so arranged that the demand will be controlled by the supply.

". . . better work must be done for less money. It means we shall have to get back to the production figures of ten years ago."

"That may sound sensational, but it is sober fact. It is true enough in other businesses—take the diamond trade for example. And, yes, look at the legitimate stage of Broadway and its dark houses. They wouldn't be dark if they could get the product, the plays, and to produce a play costs, as we all know, but a fraction of what it costs to make motion pictures. Supply is ruling the business there. The Shuberts and some others in that field have learned to their cost that the theatre is subordinate to the play. It is always ridiculous to consider the ship more important than its cargo."

"Then you think the present system of picture production and the present scale of operation will not continue?"

"Certainly not." Mr. Goldwyn got up to be emphatic. "It is impossible. It has been said that some of the big studios are equipped to turn out 50 pictures a year. I tell you that there is no studio that is mentally equipped to turn out more than 20 pictures a year, real pictures, and perhaps not that many.

"The industry is going to have to do with less and less product until an equilibrium has been reached, and various adjustments have been made out in the distribution and exhibition field."

Mr. Goldwyn went into a discussion of the changes in production problems. "Mass production, never a very sound policy, had much better chance of success in the days of the silent picture," he observed, "for a very special reason. The fact was that the silent picture, limited as it was to pantomime and a few titles, was only a cue to a play and it made each spectator his own producer for a large share of the success of the picture. The spectator did his work in what they called the 'margin of free fantasy.' The silent picture was so unspecific that the audience could idealize ad lib. Now the audience can't help us any more. Hollywood, working in words and pictures, has to do the whole job and the problem is multiplied many fold.

"There is not in the whole world enough producing genius to maintain for the sound screen anything approaching the pace of producing that Hollywood reached in the silent picture. There never will be enough."

"In the light of that, do you think, Mr. Goldwyn, that the people in Hollywood are worth what they are getting in the salaries that have attracted so much publicity?"

"That answer is easy," he snapped back. "In every industry and activity, in its earlier phases there is a process by which many are drafted and then sifted. The sifting in the newly constituted industry of Hollywood is going on as rapidly as it can without impairing the machine.

"I will say that the talent which does not draw at the box office is overpaid at any price. The time is certain to come, however, when the outstanding stars and the outstanding writers will share in the gross done at the box office on a percentage basis. In a rough way that has always been true, but the errors of adjustment of salary to value have come from a number of reasons, sometimes unwise competition, and sometimes the obvious remoteness of the production from its market experience. It is and was a condition more applicable to the volume production of silent days than it will be under the new order."

"SUPPLY NOT DEMAND"

"Some extraordinary attention has been paid in the press of late to stories about highly paid writers?"

"There are in Hollywood," commented Mr. Goldwyn, "two classes of writers; first, the conscientious workers who are trying to create and write; second, the writer-racketeers who are trying to cash on what they used to do. There are about as many of one class as there are of the other."

"And the bankers—that's a strongly current topic with the industry these days?"

"The steel business," remarked Goldwyn, "is operating at something like 20 per cent of capacity. The bankers are not upsetting the metallurgy of the steel business and telling U. S. and Bethlehem how to make more popular rails to help the railroad business.

"I have observed," he remarked, "that there are three things that nearly everybody thinks he knows all about. They are: How to run a hotel; how to run a newspaper; and how to make better motion pictures. The trouble is that every spectator becomes a self-constituted expert on the motion picture.

"Now the ultimate facts will prove that the readjustments that have to be made in the motion picture business will have to be made by its builders, and its builders are the picture makers. They are capable and they are doing it. Some businesses, most businesses, in fact, shut down when they rebuild and reorganize and undergo sweeping changes of product and policy. Did the motion picture business do that? Did it even slacken pace? No, sir. The motion picture business carried on, and is carrying on. The public and the industry as a whole can very well be grateful to Hollywood.

"Hollywood is working night and day. Hollywood works under a tension and pressure and with a relentless consistency that no one can understand who is not there, in the thick of it and a part of it."

"And where, Mr. Goldwyn, does the theatre get off in this new situation as you outline it?"

"There is the greatest hope for the theatre situation now if they will realize that they cannot build faster than Hollywood can produce, if they will not let the machinery of exhibition outrun the capacity of human genius to produce entertainment."

"While we are talking about readjustment, what do you and Hollywood think about the foreign situation?"

"That's settled," Goldwyn replied. "The success and status of the well-made American picture in the whole of the English-speaking world is assured, but we have, by gaining a voice for the screen, lost 50 per cent of the foreign market."

"And that means—what?"

"It means that picture costs cannot be maintained at the present level. It means that in the readjustment process better work must be done for less money. It means that we shall have to get back to the production figures of 10 years ago.

"I have been in the Hollywood community and making pictures 20 years. This is the first real trying period that the industry has encountered in its history. If I were starting again my choice would still be the picture business. The men of Hollywood who are making the pictures know better than anyone else what it is all about, where they are going and how they are going to get there. The picture business will give a good account of itself."

Urges Check and Control of Sound

Dr. N. M. LaPorte of Publix has issued a warning to managers, cautioning them against excessive sound volume in their theatres, and urges a constant check of auditoriums for volume control purposes. Reports of field supervisors are said to have indicated too much unnecessary loudness, producing echo, distortion, reverberation and audience discomfort generally.

The faults, it is pointed out, can in the majority of cases be remedied very easily by a simple adjustment. A thorough cleaning of apparatus is stressed as the best means of improving sound reproduction many times over. It is indicated that these difficulties exist only in a limited number of Publix houses, by no means in the majority.

Inventor Claims Wide Value For Three Dimension System

Dr. R. T. A. Innes, South African astronomer who invented a three-dimensional system, claimed recently in London that his method offers: pseudo-stereoptic relief, lack of distortion, enhanced value of color film, elimination of "rain" from scratched film, clearer pictures, makes all seats of equal value.

He claims the pictures are taken in the ordinary way and shown with ordinary projectors, the sole change being that the films are not viewed directly but in a mirror. The underlying principle rests upon the properties of the virtual image.

Insuline Company, Television Makers, Plan Wide Expansion

The Insuline Corporation of America, manufacturers of radio and television equipment, has formed a new holding corporation, Standard Television & Electric Corporation, to finance wide expansion of manufacturing facilities.

A new national advetrising campaign is being prepared in keeping with the expansion. S. J. Spector will continue as president and A. G. Heller will remain as treasurer.

Sound-on-Film for Warners With February Releases

Complete elimination of sound-on-disc by Warners is understood planned for February 1, when future releases will be made in sound-on-film only, similar to the policy now in use generally.

New Product Tells New Story: Katz

New productions on the immediate release schedule of Paramount Publix Corporation will give to the organization a new hold on motion picture business, according to Sam Katz, president of Publix Theatres. In a message in "Publix Opinion" to theatre managers, Katz says he has "deliberately refrained during the past few months from giving you exaggerated hopes, or misleading you by endorsing product which did not come up to the standard set by Paramount in the past years."

"It was a tough situation," Katz advises his operators, "necessitating a great deal of patience and faith on your part."

The Publix chief tells his men "to look forward to the new year as far as product is concerned in a more optimistic mood, secure in the knowledge that the pictures you will get in the next few months will show a tremendous improvement in entertaining values, in box-office names and, I am almost positive in grosses."

"This marked improvement in production," he continues, "does not come as a surprise. For many months now, every effort of the production department has been toward this very thing. Those of you who follow production news in the trade press know that a great deal of activity has been going on, and that many changes were made.

"Under the concentrated move toward improvement, the old Paramount spirit has returned to the studio. The same fervent desire to be at the top, the same strong urge to create the finest in picture values, the same spirit of cooperation, is actuating production today. As a result, the picture quality which was synonymous with Paramount when its activity was unparalleled, has returned."

Czechoslovakia Admits All Foreign Films With 1% Tax

The Ministry of Commerce at Prague, Czechoslovakia, has decided that all foreign sound and talking motion picture imports shall be admitted, with a special tax of one per cent to be collected, the revenue of which shall be applied to the support of home production.

An international film exhibition is scheduled as part of the 1932 spring fair at Prague, the aim of which is to show the development of Czech film production from its beginning. A site has been approved by the municipal commission of the capital for a new A-B studio near Prague. Numerous films are in production, one "The Third Troop," from a successful war novel, to be released by the Czech branch of MGM.

40 Milwaukee Houses Using The Double Feature Policy

The double feature policy in Milwaukee has reached the point where it is being played either daily or a portion of each week in more than 40 theatres, although it is generally admitted to be undesirable.

More theatres have been adopting the policy recently, for the most part for protective or competitive reasons. Both Fox and Warner circuits are double-billing in their neighborhood houses. There are approximately 70 theatres in Milwaukee.

DEMOCRATS LEAN TO BOND ISSUE INSTEAD OF TAX ON ADMISSIONS

Considerable Opposition Develops to Any Move That Will Directly and Heavily Affect the Average Wage Earners

A bond issue to pay the Government budget deficit is expected to be proposed by Democrats in Congress, supplanting the Administration's recommendations for a 10 per cent admission tax and other socalled "nuisance" levies. They favor taxes on larger incomes, however.

The position of Democratic leaders on the question of reducing the 10 per cent admission tax exemption from $3 to 10 cents as recommended by Andrew Mellon, secretary of the treasury, will not be definitely determined until some time next month, as a result of the failure of the Democratic policies committee of the Senate and House to reach an agreement at its initial organization meeting.

Financing Burden on Democrats

Wide divergence of opinion among Democratic leaders on the question of tax levies is understood to have developed. The ardor aroused when they gained control of the House having had time to cool down a bit, many of those who at first were most outspoken against giving approval to anything the Administration might recommend are becoming a little uncertain as to where they might find substitutes for some of the taxes proposed.

Having acquired control of the House, where all "money" bills must originate, the Democrats have also acquired the responsibility of financing the Government. This they can do by either tax increases or a bond issue, or both, and it is expected that, failing to find suitable tax subjects, they may offer a bond issue as a means of raising part of the anticipated deficit.

There is a great deal of opposition to anything which will directly and heavily affect the average wage earner, as would be the case with a 10 per cent tax on all admissions over 10 cents, among both Democratic and Republican members from the large cities and the industrial centers where unemployment and part-time work are prevalent.

La Guardia Offers Substitute

Some of these members might consider an admission tax starting at 25 or 35 cents, but the majority of them are understood to be opposed to any change whatever in the present exemption of $3. Their attitude is based on the contention that the motion picture is the poor man's entertainment; some of them also point out that the average theatre has taken a heavy reduction in attendance already and that many of them, particularly in poorer sections of certain cities, might even be forced out of business if the exemption was put at 10 cents.

So far, the only comprehensive tax measure introduced as an alternative for the Mellon proposals is that of Representative LaGuardia of New York, who proposes as a substitute for the admission exemption reduction a tax of 10 per cent of the total derived from the leasing or licensing for exhibition of motion picture films. LaGuardia's tax measure also provides that if the owner of a film exhibits it for private gain he shall pay a tax equivalent to 10 per cent of the fair rental or license value of the film at the time and place and for the period during which exhibited. The measure provides that where existing contracts do not permit the addition of the tax the vendee or lessee shall pay the tax instead of the vendor or lessor.

The bill also imposes a tax of 25 per cent on all sums earned by broadcasting stations from commercial programs.

Protest Published Reports

Inasmuch as it is the intention of the Democratic leaders to hold hearings on the tax bill before it is reported to the House, representatives of the industry will be given an opportunity to present their situation before any definite action is taken. It is expected that the hearings will begin about the middle of January.

When the industry does attend the hearings at Washington, it will discuss the situation with William Collier's ways and means committee of the House, Collier being chairman and a Democrat from Mississippi, simultaneously conferring with the finance committee, under chairmanship of Senator Reed Smoot (Rep., Utah).

In the meantime, industry leaders voiced vigorous opposition this week to published reports sponsored by Standard Statistics Service, of New York, which, in a financial survey of film conditions, credited important executives with saying that the entire business feels there will be little harm done by increased admission taxes.

Abram F. Myers, president of Allied States Association, Washington, telegraphed Motion Picture Herald asking that it unearth the names of the leaders who anonymously were mentioned as having belittled the effect of tax burdens as recommended by Secretary Mellon. "You will render exhibitors a real service," Myers wired, "by demanding the names of leaders making such statements and, if information is refused, by canvassing all leaders and exposing the falsity of this statement."

Accordingly, executives at Standard Statistics were challenged on the accuracy of their information and, although it was said that the information was not speculation on their part, but did come from industry "leaders," officials at Standard refused to divulge the names of those who are supposed to have issued the statement.

C. C. Pettijohn, leader in the industry's fight against proposed legislation and new taxation, likewise branded as wholly inaccurate the information supplied to Standard by socalled "leaders."

"Invest in Quality"

"Now is the time to invest in quality to restore public confidence, not the time to curtail, making pictures for a price rather than quality recognition," said Carl Laemmle on the Coast this week. The Universal president drew a parallel between the football game being always interesting, with new stars cropping up on the gridiron horizon each season, and motion pictures, with new personalities coming to the screen at regular intervals. "Attendance at baseball and football games the past season shows that the public is willing to spend money for good entertainment," said Laemmle. Noting that the producer also is willing to spend money for good entertainment on his side, Laemmle said, "Producers have been given an extremely high standard to maintain and a fickle public does not ease the responsibility one whit."

Industry Leaders Protest Published Reports That Executives Say Business Feels Increased Levy Would Do Little Harm

Robb-Rowley Unit Expected to Revert To Former Owners

Howard Hughes, now en route to New York, has discussed with Robb and Rowley preliminary details of a deal which is expected to result in the return of 40 Texas and Oklahoma theatres to the former owners.

To date, operation of the circuit has cost Hughes $600,000, including initial payments and losses sustained in operation since their acquisition. Hughes, it is understood, is eager to unload the properties, but he wants back part of the first purchase payment, to which Robb and Rowley are agreeable on condition that Hughes wait until the circuit is again on a paying basis, at which time he would be paid out of profits.

Franklin's Trip East May Result in New Theatre Job

Harold B. Franklin, who recently severed his affiliation with the Hughes-Franklin theatre circuit, will leave Los Angeles for New York on Saturday, December 26, "to look over the situation." Franklin's trip may result in a tie-up with a national circuit, Fox and Paramount having been mentioned in reports as likely employers.

INDUSTRY WILL FIGHT GOSSIP BROADCASTS

Defense Army Stationed at Listening Posts to Record Objectionable Lines for Complaint to Radio Commission

A swarm of Walter Winchell imitators on the air has aroused the ire of the motion picture industry, which is now preparing to defend itself, formally and en masse, against nightly broadcasts of gossip about Hollywood and its studio inhabitants.

An organized plan of defense already is in work and an army of listeners have been "planted" about the country to make stenographic reports of each of these broadcasts. The material will be submitted to the Federal Radio Commission.

MPPDA to Lead Fight

The attack will be led by Will H. Hays and the MPPDA, and if the 50 or more radio stations which now engage in the practice do not desist, immediate steps will be taken to force action by the Federal Radio Commission. The industry will seek to prove to the Commission at Washington its charges of mistreatment on the air.

Los Angeles, particularly, the listeners report, has developed into a hotbed of ether gossip, where radio stations KHJ and KELW are said to offer the warmer words. Led by a group of studio publicity heads, Hollywood this week took up cudgels in a fight to the finish to clear the air.

The present threatening admission tax, too, presents a serious problem in its relationship to the broadcasting of inaccurate stories of salary checks which are supposed to be paid to Hollywood workers. It is charged that the industry's plan to build up a defense against the tax suggested by Andrew Mellon is being impaired on the air.

An indication of the character of the objectionable broadcasts is offered in a citation from Los Angeles which mentioned John Gilbert. It was said on the air that Gilbert told his studio chiefs that he willingly would forego his reputed $10,000 weekly pay check in order to appear opposite a certain woman star.

Follows Winchell's Appearances

The flood of broadcasts began several weeks ago, when, following the successful appearance of Walter Winchell, New York columnist, on commercial programs over an NBC network, several "ham-and-egg" newspaper writers launched the current era of imitating the "dean of American columnists." They went one step further, however, in that instead of confining their remarks to newsy headlines, as does Winchell, many began to offer self-styled "inside" activities of stars and producers and industry leaders.

"I sincerely welcome an investigation," Winchell told MOTION PICTURE HERALD in discussing the situation. He, however, questions the sincerity of studio press agents in their participation in a fight, saying that "Hollywood's publicity men are forwarding the worst and most offensive 'gags' of all, pleading with me to credit their star clients and company players with the lines forwarded."

Winchell said that he avoids injecting "dirt" and malicious remarks in his broadcasts, mentioning as proof picture items contained in his most recent broadcasts. He read a note from Mary Pickford, thanking him for a recent remark concerning her, and said that several other important Hollywood players have written him recently in similar tone.

Plant Cuts Unwise Says Frank Capra

Warning to producers that they face a sharp falling off in quality of pictures, unless they discontinue a policy of "unwise" cost reductions at the studios is sounded by Frank Capra, Columbia's "ace" director, who is in New York en route to Europe. Capra sails December 29 for Paris, Rome, Berlin, Vienna and other cities.

"Price cutting by bankers who have no showman's sense of picture values has reached an alarming state, with consequent lowering of morale and picture quality," Capra said. "Some firms have been 'chiseling on production costs and schedules' to a point where they cannot possibly hope to make films which can stand up under the competition of other attractions and business conditions. Trying to shoot pictures in 10 or 12 days when weeks of time and effort are required is a fallacy, which producers are paying for in the form of decreased box office returns.

"Hollywood morale is at its present low point because of the influx of 'efficiency experts' and others who are trying to make pictures by factory methods, limiting negative costs to a fixed sum, continued the Columbia director. It is impossible to turn out good pictures if the enthusiasm of the director and players has been impaired by unwise cuts, he says.

"How can anyone make a picture, which deals purely with emotions, if he is unfit emotionally because of a lack of enthusiasm," he asks.

Stanley-Musician Strike Off

An amicable settlement has been effected between the Stanley-Warner Company and the Musicians' Union of Philadelphia. The Mastbaum will reopen on Christmas Day, with at least 110 musicians returning to work.

Pola Negri Passes Crisis

Pola Negri has passed the crisis of the serious illness which followed an emergency operation on the Coast. Her physician has announced that she "is on her way to complete recovery."

RKO Insists on Ability To Pay Debt Under Plan

RKO, as a result of the refinancing plan approved by stockholders, has funds "amply sufficient to meet presently maturing obligations and its anticipated requirements for a substantial period in the future," it is stated in the company's answer, filed at Baltimore, to the suit of J. Cookman Boyd to restrain carrying out of the refinancing plan. Boyd is also sponsor of a receivership suit filed prior to the stockholders' meeting, at which the plan was ratified.

The answer further states that the company has assets of $50,000,000 above liabilities and asks dismissal of the suit in a demurrer. Proceeds of the authorized sale of $11,600,000 in ten-year 6 per cent debentures, the sale to be made to stockholders and be underwritten by RCA, which will take up all debentures not bought, are available to meet existing obligations, the answer insists. It denies the company is in the broadcasting business, as alleged by Boyd.

Last week RKO issued to stockholders a general letter, signed by President Hiram S. Brown, explaining the refinancing plan. The letter was considered advisable in view of the vagueness thought to surround the exact working of the plan.

The Baltimore answer says the appointment of a receiver would impair the company's credit and its ability successfully to conduct its business. It is pointed out that the plan was legally approved by stockholders representing all of the Class B and 1,550,000 shares of the Class A stock, only 650 Class A shares voting against it.

Mr. Brown announced Wednesday that RCA had consented to a 19-day extension of time to subscribe to the new debentures and common of RKO, to the close of business January 9.

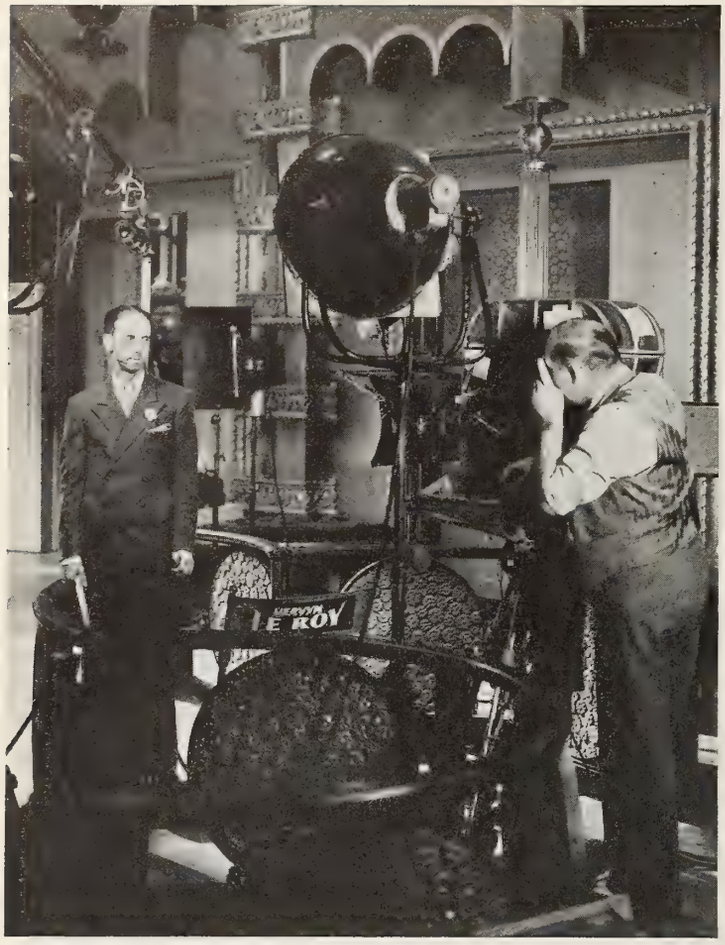
THE CAMERA REPORTS

LENDING HANDS. Among the good citizens of the studio colony who donated their prodigious talents to a monstrous entertainment at the Shrine Civic Auditorium in Los Angeles for the benefit of the city's poor and needy. Here are a few of the motion picture folk who took part —Polly Moran, Martin Proones, Charlotte Greenwood, Mrs. Roscoe Ates, Roscoe Ates and Dorothy Ates.

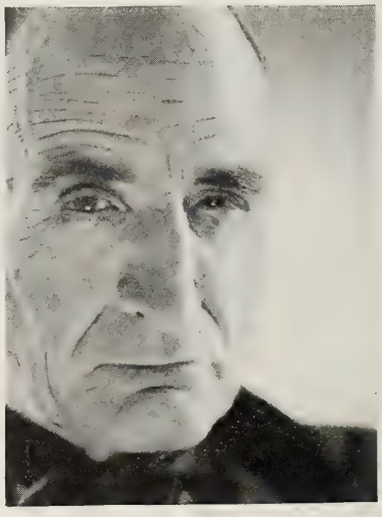
ACME PHOTO

LATEST STYLE. That is, as late as milady's bedtime. It's a nightie of cream satin with fitted bodice, trimmed in lace, displayed here by Polly Walters, Warner player.



ACME PHOTO

CONFIRMATION. Yes, the reports were true. Clara Bow and Rex Bell are married, and here's proof: The marriage "stiff-cut" itself, exhibited by the parties thereof, at the bride's Beverly Hills home.



RECRUIT. (Below). They come and go, but "Our Gang" goes on forever. Here is the newest member of this perennially young Roach-MGM comedy group. He's Spanky.

UNSUNG CELEBRITIES. Here at work is one of those whose part in picture making goes unheralded. This chap is not William Powell—it is Warren Dearborn. Because he resembles Powell he saves the Warner star time and energy by taking his "spot" while cameras and lights are set.

SIGNED. (Above) Addie McPhail, well known Mack Sennett screen comedienne (and rather welcome relief in this era of platinumites), who has been signed by Educational. Now in "Keep Laughing."

COPPER. (Left) As we would call le Prefect de Police, as whom we here see Brandon Hurst, veteran character actor, in Universal's picturization of Poe's "Murders in the Rue Morgue," scare story.

LEGEND OF THE PEARLS. At any rate, if you know any good bedtime stories along that line, here's a dandy illustration. "And the gre-a-t big jewel case opened up, and there was a beautiful princess—" Even dad might like it! We like the illustration ourselves, think it a very fetching study of M-G-M's Hal Roach comedienne, Thelma Todd.

AIRING HER VIEWS. Edith Meserand, for several years a member of the public relations staff of the National Broadcasting Company, shown in her new capacity, that of a radiocaster herself, for WGBS.

A HIT. (Above) She's used to 'em, is Marilyn Miller, but while this smile may be a lovely habit, it seems specifically deserved by her new First National picture, "Her Majesty, Love."

MRS. WONG. (Right) That is, the real wife of the fictitious Mr. Wong. Actually, Mrs. Edward G. Robinson—Gladys Hall to you—shown as in her husband's vehicle, "The Honorable Mr. Wong."

YOUNG MALAYANS. Frank Buck, who has just returned from the jungles of Malaya, with two pets he brought from there—a baby elephant and a tiger cub. Buck headed an expedition making travel pictures for RKO-Van Beuren in those little known peninsular wilds.

MEET THE WIFE. The wife of James Cagney, whom the Warner Brothers star himself here brings forward for a share of the celebrity that he enjoys—and thus ingratiating himself still further!

SHOOTING IN TECHNICOLOR. Preparations being made on the set of "The Manhattan Parade" at the Warner studio, for sequences in technicolor, which requires the big lamps here shown being focused under the supervision of Director Lloyd Bacon, who is attended by two members of the cast, Winnie Lightner and Charles Butterworth.

HA! THE PLOT THICKENS!

Story Calls for Film Business Paper Solicitor; Then Ad Man for ALMANAC Appears on Set

They're filming the S. S. Van Dine mystery stories out near the United States in the Flatbush Vitaphone Studios. Joe Henabery is directing.

The beauteous Thelma Tipson was draped fascinatingly over the glistening rayon counterpane in a glamorous bedroom. Sam Sax's supervising eye looked on approvingly.

Harry Puck in the murder mystery is a solicitor for a film business paper. He rushes into the star's bedroom carrying in his arms a MOTION PICTURE ALMANAC, and after Thelma fires off the usual stock of objections to paying a little for publicity, she yells, "Well, I'll take a page in your book, but don't put me near that man." The solicitor didn't drop dead. That makes it mysterious. You can't tell whether they are going to accuse "that man" or the ad solicitor of murder. In real life, there is no doubt what the actors would prefer. The scene was shot. Sam Sax went to his office.

Ha! Stranger Enters

A little later a stranger entered the studio, looked around in a mysterious manner at the proceedings, eyed the set and then the actors. He picked out Donald Meek.

"Mr. Meek, I want you for a page in the MOTION PICTURE ALMANAC," he said, and then gave him a strong argument on the advantage and necessity of advertising in the publication.

"Why," said Meek with a trained eye to acting excellence, "you did that beautifully. Why didn't you get the job?"

"Get the job? I did."

"Well," said Meek, "they used the wrong man."

"Wrong? Whadderyermean, wrong?"

Up walked John Hamilton, Meek's co-star.

"Now Mr. Hamilton," said the stranger, "I want you to advertise in the MOTION PICTURE ALMANAC, the greatest advertising medium in the industry."

Hamilton laughed, slapping the stranger on the shoulder. "You did that well. Why didn't they give you the job?"

"It is my job."

"Well, why didn't you do it?"

"I am doing it. What's up with you guys?"

Henabery Becomes Suspicious

Hamilton whispered to Joe Henabery. Henabery looked suspiciously at the stranger. "Who told you to come in here?"

"Mary Rosenfeld."

"What's your name?"

"Craven. One of the stagehands—"

"This guy thinks he's Craven"—to the stranger, "You're crazy."

Donald Meek: "He must be crazy. He thinks he's acting in the show. Who let in that nut anyway?"

Cameraman: "He looks goofy. Chuck him out."

Thelma Tipson: "The poor man has a strange look in his eye. He must be out of work."

Harry Puck: "He thinks he's me."

Donald Meek: (shaking his head): "It's sad indeed."

John Hamilton: "Just stage business."

Joe Henabery: "Chuck him out."

Stagehand pushes the stranger toward the exit. Crack! The pusher gets a punch.

Half a dozen push the mad man past Sam Sax's office. Sam and publicity director, Selzer, rush out to see what the noise is about.

Sam Sax to the Rescue

Sax: "What are you doing with that man?"

Stagehand: "He's crazy. He thinks he's trying to sell advertising in the act. He thinks he's Craven."

Stranger: "Cheese and crust. Sam, tell these nuts, will you?"

Sam Sax: "Let him alone! That's Craven of MOTION PICTURE HERALD. Do you think the man's crazy because he wants to sell advertising to actors?"

Craven went into Selzer's publicity office to straighten out, and Sam Sax returned from the set where he had been investigating.

"Sorry, Fred," said the genial Sam with a grin on his face, "our mistake. You see, we have a man in the Studio Murder Mystery who is selling advertising in the ALMANAC, and they thought you were suffering from hallucinations—you were Frank Craven acting in the film. That ought to be good for a lot of business."

What's that about "he who laughs last"?

New Device Uses Picture Film For Television Broadcasting

The Western Television Corporation, Chicago, has announced the use of a new synchronization device which will permit employment of standard film in making television broadcasts.

Heretofore, difficulties in using standard film have arisen as a result of the high percentage of errors, due to the fact that the film camera exposes 24 sections of film a second, while television scanning systems work at a maximum rate of 20 sections per second.

Cutler-Hammer Develops New Projection Current Control

Cutler-Hammer, Inc., Milwaukee projector manufacturers, have developed an automatic current controller for arc projection machines, designed to replace the usual knife switches used to control the current to the carbons, and claimed to offer other safety assurances.

The heavy currents required by the projector are handled by heavy duty magnetic contactors. Magnetic blowouts are said to reduce arching, resulting in longer life and reduced maintenance costs.

Iowa Allied Meets January 12

The Allied States unit in Iowa has set January 12 and 13 as dates for a state meeting in Des Moines. It will follow a series of district meetings, when matters will be brought up which will be further discussed at the state session.

A SHARP REBUKE!

The WISCONSIN NEWS, Milwaukee daily, recently issued a stinging editorial rebuke to certain school directors who had refused to permit school children to sell tickets for the benefit performances at the Milwaukee film theatres during Motion Picture Week, thus:

"School Director Walter Alexander said it was going to be a 'flop,' but the people of Milwaukee turned out and made the movie benefit a great success. One wonders how Mr. Alexander, Miss Sherman, Mr. Wehe and those other school directors who prevented the sale of tickets by school children feel about their smart and callous action today.

"The Milwaukee public certainly gave them a stinging slap by rallying so whole-heartedly to the support of this benefit for the unemployed.

"About 1,000 workless men will receive nearly two weeks' employment as the result of this benefit—a wonderful Christmas gift from the community.

"If Milwaukee could only have more 'flops' like this benefit, so generously provided by our movie interests, its unemployed would be tided safely over the winter. The school directors who pettily refused to cooperate in this charitable enterprise may have their minds on other matters as they placidly eat their Christmas dinners.

"But the Milwaukee public will not forget."

Cruze Turns Stage Producer; Buys Play by Coast Unknown

James Cruze has turned legitimate producer. He has purchased a play by an unknown dramatist, Charles L. Farr, and plans to produce it in New York with Maurice Kusell, known in Hollywood for his dance productions in motion pictures, it is understood.

The play, "A Cross in Eden," will have Betty Compson as its feminine lead. It is thought Cruze may adapt it for the screen, as well. It concerns the Mormons in 1900. Farr is a lawyer, interested in "little theatre" movements.

Set Tentative SMPE Date

The Society of Motion Picture Engineers' board of governors has voted that the spring meeting of the organization shall be held in either New York or Washington, with a tentative date set for May 9 to 12. Choice of cities will be decided by ballot of members.

EXHIBITORS OF JAPAN ORGANIZE FOR SAVING AND COOPERATION

Ask 30 Per Cent Reduction of Taxes, Lower Rentals of Films and Buildings, Halving of the High Charges for Electricity

Exhibitors of all Japan are undertaking a program of economies and closely-knit cooperation to meet present-day problems in much the same way that the industry in America and that of Germany* have taken progressive steps toward shaking off all impediments to thorough workmanship in all branches.

Just as representatives of American companies in Germany are watching the developments there, so too the American industry is viewing the progress made in Japan, where the movement had its inception at a meeting of exhibitors in Tokyo November 12, particularly as it concerns phases of the problem identical with those in this country.

More than one hundred exhibitors representing close to fifty cities of various parts of the Empire met at the Tokyo-kaikan, the social center of the city, at the call of Mr. Sai Ichikawa, proprietor of the Kokusai Eiga Tshushin (The International Film News Service, Inc.). Mr. Ichikawa, who organized the Motion Picture Theatres Association of Tokyo June 4, advocated a gathering of exhibitors of the Empire to perfect cooperation in every phase of activity.

Arrangements were undertaken for a convention of exhibitors of all Japan, with fifty exhibitors named as the preparatory committee to plan organization of a league.

Other decisions reached at the Tokyo meeting were these:

Negotiations be launched with producers, importers and distributors for a reduction in film rental prices.

The Government be petitioned to make a 30 per cent reduction of taxes on the theatres.

Owners of buildings used by the theatres be asked to reduce rent in view of the existing conditions.

Electric companies be urged to make a 50 per cent reduction in charge for current.

Exhibitors be assisted in organizing local associations throughout the Empire.

Representations be made to the government regarding the national policy toward the film industry.

February 11, birthday of the late Thomas Alva Edison, be made Motion Picture Memorial Day with a cinema festival to be observed annually all over the country.

Among subjects postponed until the general meeting were these: unification of prefectural rules regulating exhibition and the theatres, education of film employees, and financing for the industry.

Exhibitors of eastern Japan had met November 10 and 11, and organized the Shochiku Remmei, a league of 230 theatres which are exhibiting pictures produced by the Shochiku Cinema Company. This association decided to seek reduced rentals.

The fifty exhibitors selected on the general arrangements committee are:

I. Miyake, director, Japan Movie Show Co., of Tokyo.
G. Nakatani, proprietor, Nakatani Exhibiting Co., Tokyo.
K. Misu, managing director, Kimbikan theatre circuit, Tokyo.
M. Okura, proprietor, Okura Exhibiting Co., Tokyo.
M. Miwa, managing director, Matsuyama Exhibiting Co., Omori.
S. Hayakawa, owner and exhibitor, Hatchobori-Cinema, Tokyo.
I. Mutsuzaki, owner, Odeon theatre, Yokohama.
S. Usui, proprietor, Usui Movie Show Co., Chiba.
Y. Nonaka, proprietor, Yasuhiro Movie Show Co., Mayebashi.
S. Ono, exhibitor, Chuoh-kan theatre and others of Kofu.
K. Hara, exhibitor, Koen-kan theatre, Otaru.
K. Ohtake, proprietor, Daikatsu Movie Show Co., Niigata.
S. Yezaki, president, Shizuoka Movie Co., Ltd., Shizuoka.
T. Takemoto, proprietor, Takemoto Movie Show Co., Nagoya.
K. Suzuki, president, Kyoto Movie Show Co., Kyoto.
S. Tamura, exhibitor, Taishoza theatre and others of Fukui.
S. Miura, exhibitor, Asahi-kan theatre, Akita.
S. Morita, proprietor, Morita Movie Show Co., Osaka.
T. Takada, exhibitor, Toyoza theatre and others, Hiroshima.
U. Ueda, owner, Kasugakan theatre, Kobe.
S. Okamotor owner, Honkawa-za theatre, Moji.
K. Mayeda, exhibitor, Taishuza theatre and others, Fukuoka.
T. Suyehiro, exhibitor, Teikoku-kan theatre and others, of Kagoshima.

Investigator May Urge Proceedings Against Circuits

Announcement has been made by F. A. Staten at Madison, Wis., a member of the state department in charge of investigating alleged unfair trade practices, that the department is "considering filing a complaint with the Milwaukee county district attorney urging him to start proceedings against local distributors for withholding material from the department of agriculture and markets."

This is the first definite development as a result of the generally understood filing, by the Allied Independent Theatres of Wisconsin, of complaints with the state department concerning the operation of circuits. Secret investigations were understood to be under way. It is reported that the investigation had been delayed by distributors who insisted on approval of New York offices before giving the department access to their Milwaukee records.

Allied Directors Will Hold Meet in Chicago January 6

The national board of directors of Allied States Association will meet at the Congress Hotel, Chicago, January 6, at which most of the organization leaders are expected to be present.

It is held likely that consideration will be given the possibility of a national convention similar to that of last March. The meeting on January 6 follows the Aaron Saperstein testimonial by one day.

At the Center of Population—the Grand at Linton, Neb.

LINTON THEATRES AT POPULATION CENTER

By the Same Token Indianans Typify Good Entertainment in Average City; Patrons Typify Largest Class of Americans

A unique distinction attaches to the Grand and Sher-Ritz theatres of Linton, Ind., by courtesy of the United States Census Board and by virtue of its peculiarly central location, geographically, on the map of these United States.

Linton, say the undeniable and most positive statistical experts of Uncle Sam's people-counting departments, is the center of population of the United States of America. Therefore, the Grand and Sher-Ritz theatres are the most central motion picture houses, popularly speaking, in the country.

Representative Small Theatres

Wholly in keeping with this distinction is the fact that these two houses are unmistakably representative of hundreds of other theatres in hundreds of other communities the country over, lacking Linton's peculiarity of location, yet at one with them in policy, pictures and the people who attend and pay through the medium of the box office. The people of Linton spend most of their working time in the mines and the balance of it on the farms and between farming and mining, manage to find their way, during a goodly portion of their leisure moments, beneath the marquees of the Grand and Sher-Ritz, which shine down upon Main Street with beckoning invitation.

There is little real wealth in Linton, at least as wealth is reckoned in this country. The inhabitants of the town are industrious, necessarily hard-working and of an equally necessary saving nature. They are essentially what has come to be known as America's dependable middle class, which knows no wealth, but, on the other hand, knows no poverty. They are the people who, at the country's center of population, excellently typify the whole order of America's largest proportion of population, and at the same time, typify equally well, the greater bulk, by far, of America's picture-going public, which Hollywood strives and New York plans to please for the glory of the industry and the best interests of multitudinous stockholders.

Two Types of Houses

One of the two theatres, the Grand, is devoted to the higher type, more expensive productions exclusively, while the Sher-Ritz, second house, occupies its playing time, equally exclusively, with that type of production which, though of equal importance and revenue-gathering value as those played at its big-brother house, are nevertheless more of the regular run feature picture sort than the "special," or super-production.

Linton is a thriving city, and the two local theatres apparently serve it very well, in what seems to be an ideal arrangement in covering the whole production schedule for the best entertainment interests of the people. The Grand, top house of the two, seats 700 and operates seven days each week with daily matinees, the Sher-Ritz seats 325 and operates part time and evenings only.

The output of practically every major company already has been bought for the year, indicating that Linton's theatre manager, R. F. Scherer, is doing considerable of a good job in the provision of screen entertainment for his patrons. Both houses operate on a policy of three changes each week. At the Grand evening admission is 15 cents for children and 25 and 35 cents for adults; matinee prices are 10 cents for children and 25 cents for adults. Wednesday and Thursday are "Ladies' Matinees," at which two of the fair sex are admitted for 25 cents. At the Sher-Ritz admission on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday is 10 cents and 25 cents and on Wednesday and Thursday 10 cents and 20 cents.

Goldberg Dines 50 Employees; Calls Curtailment Bad Policy

Aaron Goldberg, head of Goldberg Theatres, San Francisco, expressed the conviction that amusement interests should be the last to curtail expenditures, at the annual banquet he tendered his employees. The affair was held at the Hotel St. Francis last week.

Christmas gifts in the form of salary bonuses were distributed among the 50 employees of the six small downtown houses included in the circuit. The organization recently added group insurance for all its workers.

John R. Freuler, president of Big 4, will spend the holiday season in Milwaukee, after which he will return to New York before going to the Coast to oversee production. Ben Judell, I. J. Roher, S. K. Decker were exchangemen-affiliates of Big 4 at the home office during the week.

MGM MYSTIFIES AUSTRALIANS AS TO CIRCUIT TO GET PRODUCT

Paramount Is Selling to Hoyts For First Time in Five Years, Bringing Open Opposition to Greater Union, It is Said

By CLIFF HOLT, Sydney

United Artists remaining on the open market, MGM is the only distributor which has not yet completed contracts for the disposal of its 1931-32 product to an Australian circuit. In view of the fact that this company, as far as the Antipodes are concerned, was the undisputed leader in the past season, more than ordinary interest is manifest in the impending sale—when and to whom. N. Bernard Freeman, Australasian chief of MGM, refuses to satisfy inquirers, possibly because he finds it impossible to do so; but rumor, always on the move, became even livelier than usual when it was reported that MGM's sales manager. David Lake, who had been visiting New Zealand, had quietly slipped across to the United States to interview home office executives in connection with the placing of the line-up. As in the case of so many rumors, however, this one fizzled.

For the first time in five years, Paramount has sold to Hoyts, thereby bringing the company into open opposition to Greater Union Theatres. A few weeks ago, before the affairs of Union reached a climax, it seemed that the alienation between these two companies, Paramount and Union, would last into eternity. But outstanding accounts practically forced cancellation of the existing agreement, and now Paramount and Fox in Hoyts theatres will be in spirited competition with Greater Union, which will be running product from Warner-First National, Greater Australasian Films, handling Columbia and British Dominions; Universal, RKO, handling Radio and Pathe; and Union Theatres Feature Exchange, releasing British International.

The half-yearly accounts, then, will give some idea of how each distributor's output is living up to policy book promises.

The functioning of the Distributors' Committee with Greater Union Theatres constitutes an experiment never before attempted in the industry. The committee is comprised of a representative of Greater Union, and of each distributor with which Union holds contracts. Its job is to grade the combined pictures, and after deciding what shall be the feature, leave it to the distributors directly concerned on individual programs, and Union, to determine the amount which is to go to each exchange after deducting the theatre's general overhead. Rental agreements in future will be drawn up on the basis of 20 per cent to Union of the gross receipts; film hire to be the next charge; and the balance to be shared equally by the distributors represented on the bill, and the theatre company. Clarified, the arrangement is this: If a theatre with running expenses of $5,000 a week takes $10,000, film hire would be $3,000, and the return to the house would be $7,000, leaving Union a profit of $2,000. The $3,000 film hire would be divided between the distributors in whatever proportion had been agreed upon.

More than one section of the trade inclines to the opinion that this unusual distributor-circuit alliance is a pretty good thing for the former; but it's difficult to understand their line of reasoning. They raise the question that in the event of a succession of losing weeks, Union will find itself facing a sizeable deficit, forgetting, evidently, that with film rental added, the deficit would be a whole lot greater. The arrangement is obviously to Union's benefit, particularly in periods when money is tight, because, in the event of a losing week, the renter carries his share of the loss as well.

Creation of an Australian quota, if local exhibitors refuse to encourage domestic producers, is suggested in an official statement issued by Frank Forde, Commonwealth minister for customs.

"If Australian exhibitors decline to aid local industry by screening Australian talking pictures of suitable standard," says the statement, "the government will have to consider taking specific steps to deal with the situation. We have been sending abroad about $5,000,000 a year for cinematograph entertainment. The time has now arrived when we must conserve that money."

Anxious to pass that comment on to the industry the world over, Forde told MOTION PICTURE HERALD that his remarks were "not a threat, but as a plain statement of national economics."

Forde doesn't want a quota; apart from Australian actors and musicians who might be given a little employment by its introduction, few do want it. A quota always has and always will defeat itself, for by eliminating competition, the necessity of beating the opposition no longer exists.

At the present time Australian producers, in the shape of Efftee Films of Melbourne, are making serious and praiseworthy attempts to enter the world market with film sold on merit; and Efftee's first picture, "Diggers," a wartime comedy, shows that the company is on the right track. Technically, it bears comparison with any imported production, and is probably a great deal better than many features of the program variety sent out to Australia with a leading producer's trademark on them. There is still plenty of room for improvement, however, and nobody would be more willing to admit that than Efftee.

United Artists' entry into talking picture production in Australia was considered a likelihood by newspaper writers prior to Ralph Doyle's return from the company's international conference in London. The trade refused to take the reports seriously, and they were effectively delivered by a knockout blow soon after Doyle was back in Sydney. Decisions reached at the conference do not affect the organization's policy in Australia in the slightest. Discussing English theatrical conditions, Doyle says that "the English think they are having a bad time, but they don't know what a bad time is." But, of course, he is so used to Australia!

Stuart F. Doyle, managing director of Greater Union Theatres and the most picturesque figure in the Australian film industry for years, may soon forsake pictures for radio. It is known that he has been offered the chairmanship of the Radio Board, which shortly will assume control of "A" class wireless programs throughout the Commonwealth. If he accepts, he will be required to devote the whole of his time to the job. The salary is said to be $20,000 a year, and, furthermore, it's regular. Not so to the man who is running a theatre business these days.

The first "freak" picture since "Viennese Nights," which ran for six months at the Sydney Prince Edward while more spectacular productions lasted a fortnight, is Universal's "Waterloo Bridge." It wasn't generally regarded as a long-run proposition by the trade here; but H. C. McIntyre, head of Universal in Australasia, believed otherwise, and in an enterprising move leased the Haymarket (variously a picture and revue house), preceded the opening with strong advertising, and now has the satisfaction of seeing remarkable queues clamoring to gain admittance. That he, in addition, has established "Waterloo Bridge" for nationwide releasing purposes, should also give him more than one restful night.

LAZARUS DEBUNKS MISTER HOOEY

Jeff (smile, darn ya, smile) Lazarus, purveyor of publicity for Howard Hughes' theatres in California, calls upon everyone in the industry to debunk the bunkers, de-hooey the hooeyers, de-wolf those who cry "wolf!" and hang the pessimists.

"Can't talk to anybody in the show business these days," opines Jeff, "without getting the feeling that the world is coming to an end. How the devil can people be expected to work with enthusiasm when spirits are depressed?

"The one thing and the only thing that's going to do us any good is to weed out the people who don't know anything about entertainment, either its creation, its construction, or its exploitation; and let those people whose records show that they understand and love the entertainment business, run whatever is left of what was once the most gorgeous business in America."

Creation of Quota Plan Suggested by Minister for Customs If Exhibitors Do Not Support Their Home Product

BRITISH MUST CHANGE FRONT TO WIN CANADA

Viewpoint on Exploitation Wrong, Say Theatre Men of Toronto; Fed Up on Talk Of British Film Circuit

[By Canadian Correspondent]

If the British film producers ever hope to gain a substantial footing in Canada, they will have to change their method of approach. This is the comment that is being heard on various important sides in the film business of the Dominion. Recent British product has quality, it is admitted, but there is room for improvement in marketing methods, it is stated. In other words, British producers have yet to learn how to exploit their pictures in Canada and the shortcoming is the lack of native atmosphere in publicity and advertising. Leading motion picture men in Toronto are saying so.

The consensus is that the Canadian public is fed up with talk of the establishment of "a chain of theatres in the key cities of Canada which will specialize in British films." This is a gag that has been worked to death. Such a chain is obviously impossible, particularly under present conditions. One of the men higher up in film trade circles of Toronto estimates that a worthwhile group of British theatres in the Dominion would entail an investment of $7,000,000. So something different will have to be said.

Calls Material Unsuitable

Film distributors in Canada have been asserting that "publicity that is acceptable in England is not appropriate for Canada and is not likely to get across." The manager of a British film division in a Toronto company has declared that British publicity material is of practically no value in Canada, much revision being necessary. Newspaper engravings or matrices are not of the proper width or screen. Still photographs and posters often are not suitable and frequently there is not sufficient material of these kinds.

It is being said that the need of the British film industry is the preparation of exploitation details by a Canadian or one with the Canadian viewpoint. The publicity, particularly, has to be Canadianized—even to the extent of adopting Canadian or American slang.

Another point that is being held against the British companies is the delay in service. One Toronto film exchange manager declared he had looked over some advance literature on new British releases in July but he could not hope to get the prints before January—too late for the current season. So he did not buy. Another manager declared that the names of English stage celebrities, now appearing in pictures, are of little or no box office value in Canada. Exploitation should be directed toward building up a "reputation" for them among Canadian fans.

Duty Removal Not Solution

"The British film problem in Canada will not be solved if the Canadian Government entirely removes the duty on British film imports under the new Empire reciprocal movement," said another. "Something more than that is necessary and that is appropriate Canadian exploitation. The people will not go to see a picture just because it is British. At the same time, poor British pictures must be discouraged. One poor picture undoes a lot of good work and considerable mouthwashing has to be done to remove the bad taste."

There is considerable talk in Canada right now about British films but some of it is brutally frank. It is being said that British pictures now have the best chance they have had since the early days but appropriate Canadian exploitation is needed to capitalize the opportunity. Perhaps the British companies are seeing the handwriting on the wall and will cooperate to the extent of arranging for the establishment of a proper propaganda agency in the Dominion entirely apart from Imperial Government channels which are invariably regarded as having a particular ax to grind along patriotic lines or otherwise.

Cooper Defends The Industry In Montreal Speech

A "defense" of the moving picture business in Canada was presented recently by Colonel John A. Cooper of Toronto, president of the Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors of Canada, in an address on "The Canadian Motion Picture Problem" before the Junior Board of Trade in Montreal in which he dealt with the impending trial of film companies and individuals at Toronto in January and also gave an analysis of the theatre situation in the Dominion.

"In the minds of the public the great question to be decided in connection with the motion picture industry is whether there should be large circuits of theatres and whether any of these circuits should be controlled in a corporate way outside of Canada or not," declared Cooper. "This is the aspect of the question which interests the women's organizations and, to a large extent, the editorial columns of the daily press. Personally, I doubt very much if the courts will allow this question to be discussed."

At the trial, at which charges of trade conspiracy will be heard, two questions would probably be decided, Col. Cooper felt. These would be: first, the legality of the standard contract for the leasing of films to theatres, and, second, the propriety of uniform arbitration.

The standard contract was similar in many respects to those in existence in England and the United States, Cooper explained. It helped the average theatre owner, who signed 30 to 40 of such contracts a year, by assuring him that he was contracting for films on the same terms from each of Canada's 10 distributing houses and that he was leasing films on the same general terms as his competitor. In case of arbitration, under the contract, the award was not final because it could be appealed by either party before a judge.

Cooper continued: "In Canade there has been less centralization than in other countries but there is a tendency toward greater centralization. There are 31 circuits in Canada of three or more theatres each. These 31 circuits control 300 of the best theatres in Canada and represent fully 50 per cent. of the Canadian motion picture business. In Canada there is less connection between these large theatre owning corporations on the one hand and the distributors and producers on the other, than there is in either England or the United States."

Emanuel Cohen, Paramount short subject production head, returned Tuesday from the Coast. Shorts production plans for 1932 will get under way immediately. Work at the Astoria plant begins on March 1.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

AND now that Al Capone is safely behind prison bars, the editor of New Yorker tells us why Al was never recorded in talkies, like all other big shots of the day. The fact is he nearly appeared in a newsreel and the deal fell through only at the last moment.

Some months ago, one of the enterprising newsreel companies had the idea; diplomatic overtures were made through Mr. Capone's representatives, and word was returned that the big chief was agreeable. Probably thought he owed it to the youth of the land.

At the appointed hour, Capone turned up at the company's studio on 10th Avenue, traveling to New York for the event, accompanied by an alert little gentleman, his lawyer. One of the officials of the company received them in his office. After introductions and appropriate greetings, the newsreel official turned and jovially remarked: "If you gentlemen will park your guns here, we'll go into the recording room." Quick as a flash, the lawyer was on his feet, hostile at the "wisecrack."

"My client did not come here to be insulted," he snapped. And he and Mr. Capone departed abruptly.

As if the camera lens needed any special attachment to do this. Nature often does very well in the same direction.

Winchell suggests, among other things, the publication of "red-hot news" in Equity instead of the present stale material, as a means of building up the periodical. Real live news, says Walter, would aid tremendously in making Equity a commercial success; news like this, for instance:

That right now the Messrs. Gilmore and Dulzell, Equity officials, are the chief combatants in Equity's most serious internal war. So serious a war that Equity may explode at any moment and blow itself right off the map!

ECONOMIC forces have practically revolutionized the economic scheme and general modus operandi of Hollywood. There is a new way, it seems, of doing everything; even praise agents have adopted a new style, as for instance the following typical example from the pen of Don Eddy, who tells the world about RKO's production activities from the Coast.

Says Don: "In Hollywood's survival-of-the-fittest struggle, where quarter is seldom asked, and never given, victory does not always go to the strong and rugged. On the contrary, the dainty, delicate little ladies who appear more adapted to the sheltered luxury than bitter warfare, predominate among the feminine survivors."

NEW YORKER DEVELOPS SUBMARINE TELEVISION

Dr. Hans Hartman Visions All Undersea Activities Viewed In Homes; Device Includes a Still, Motion Picture Camera

A dream of youth, concocted 25 years ago, has become a reality, says Dr. Hans Hartman, electrical engineer of New York, as he steps into his submarine diving bell, equipped with a new television and motion picture device of his own invention, and descends to a depth of 2,500 feet below the surface of the Mediterranean Sea. The greatest depth below the surface of the sea ever reached by man has been attained by Dr. Hartman, whose Deep Sea Research Society and achievements in deep sea study have piqued the curiosity of Europe.

Already tested and patented, the invention of Dr. Hartman is a submarine television apparatus combined with a motion picture camera, with which it is also possible to record "still" photographs, according to the inventor.

The novel device is equipped with powerful special submarine illuminators, and consists of a steel globe wherein are arranged the television mechanism and a motion picture camera, driven electrically and controlled from above the vessel, where observers, assembled in the dark cabin of a ship on the surface, may watch the image upon a screen like a motion picture, according to Hartman. As soon as something which, in the opinion of the operator within the diving apparatus is worth photographing, appears within the illuminated area thousands of feet below the surface, a touch upon an electric lever within the apparatus sets the motion picture camera in operation.

The submarine television images may be transmitted, says the inventor, by the ship's radio to land stations and broadcasted by those stations over an entire country, where, according to the picture word-painted by Hartman, people may sit at their firesides and watch the progress of life thousands of feet below the surface of the ocean, perhaps thousands of miles away, through the medium of their television receiving apparatus.

Already has Dr. Hartman, descending to great depths in the Mediterranean Sea, been credited with the discovery of a submerged pre-historic city at approximately 350 feet, which he hopes one day to explore with his submarine television apparatus, taking, at the same time, motion pictures of the strange structures still standing, which cover an extensive area.

The achievement of a descent to a depths of 2,500 feet may be the more readily appreciated when it is realized that the limit of depth to which a diver, encased in the most modern of diving armor, has so far descended is 310 feet and that his working limit is but a meager 200 feet. At the 2,500 feet depths, the pressure per square inch is 1,110 pounds, while at the diver's limit it is only 133 pounds.

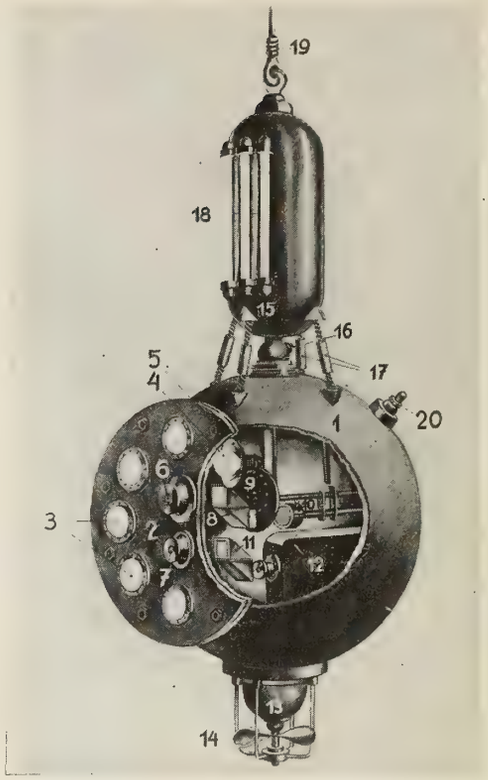
The submarine television apparatus, or diving bell, as such mechanisms have come to be familiarly known, consists of a strong steel globe, closed and sealed by a removable cover, into which are set heavy quartz lenses through which passes the light of powerful lamps intensified by reflectors. A lens leads the image of the illuminated exterior area through a double prism and a revolving scanning disc to a photo-cell, while a second lens serves a similar purpose with another set of prisms for the electrically driven motion picture camera. Control from the surface permits of reproduction of the television images upon a screen in a dark cabin of the accompanying ship.

The entire apparatus being lighter than the water it displaces, it is pulled into the depths by means of a vertically positioned small propeller, driven by an electric motor. Should the suspending cable break, the motor immediately stops and the bell will rise of its own buoyancy to the surface. Above the bell is arranged a steel cylinder, containing air at very high pressure, which will automatically pass through a regulating valve into the bell to maintain there an air pressure almost equal to the water pressure. The air will escape through a valve and the apparatus returns to the surface.

Westinghouse, Philco Join Television Set Makers

Efforts to put commercially practical television receiving sets in the stores of radio dealers within a few weeks, at the latest, are being pushed by Westinghouse and Philco, it is reported in the radio trade.

The Westinghouse sets are being developed by the RCA organization, and will be manufactured at the Camden, N. J., plant of RCA-Victor. They will be guaged with particular reference to the television station of RCA's National Broadcasting Company in the Empire State building in New York. This station will be established upon removal to that location of the present Times Square unit of NBC.



It is stated that the Philco set will embrace methods covered by the Farnsworth patents which, it is said, were recently acquired by this branch of the Philadelphia Electric Storage Battery Company.

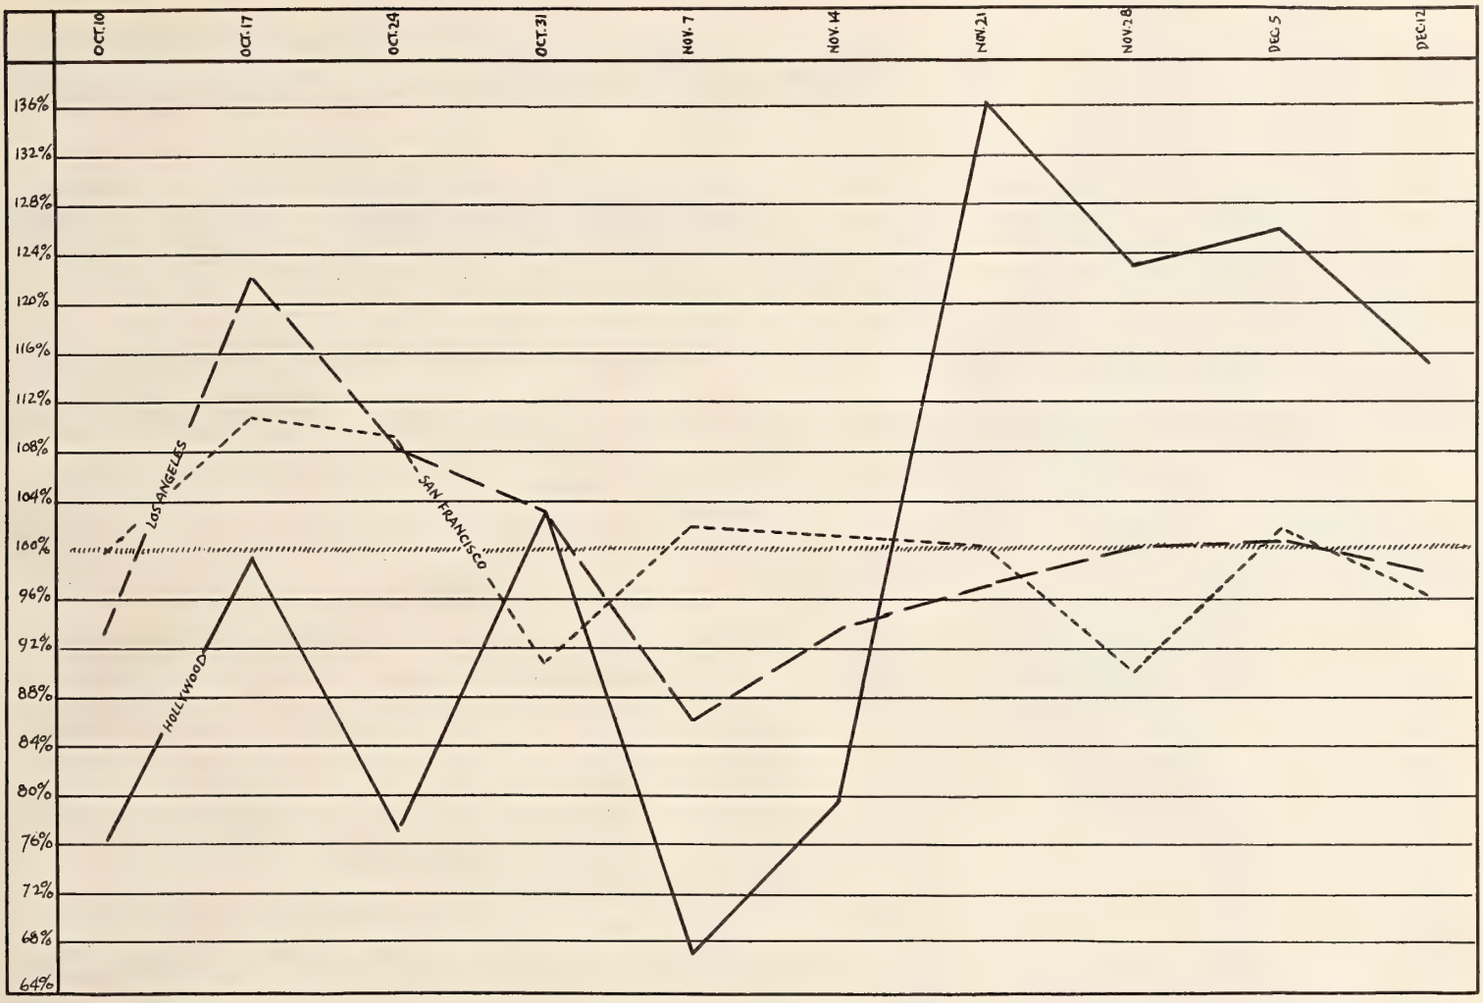
32 Films by March —Warner Schedule



Warner-First National will have 32 features made or in work by March 1, at the Coast studios, for the first half of the producing season. Nine pictures have been completed, five are in work and 18 are scheduled up to February 29. The present status of the production schedule is as follows:

Pictures now shooting	5
Starting in December	5
Starting in January	6
Starting in February	7
Total	23

Jack L. Warner revealed, in announcing the program, that it is the intention of the company to make 1932 "a laugh year," with comedy given front line position in story treatments.

"To paraphrase Raymond Hitchcock's line in the old 'Yankee Consul'," said Warner. " 'This is the time for joy and laughter —not the cold, gray dawn of the morning after'. People have enough of the grayness at home these days and a laugh in the theatres of the country will take their minds off their troubles, at least temporarily, and I hope permanently.

"So far as good taste and reason permit, we are going to make this a 'Laugh Year,' selecting stories that lend themselves to amiable treatment," said Warner. "Coming up for release in the next few weeks, are "Manhattan Parade," with Smith & Dale, Winnie Lightner and Charles Butterworth; "Taxi" with James Cagney and Loretta Young; "Fireman, Save My Child," with Joe E. Brown; "High Pressure," with William Powell; "Old Man Minick," with Charles (Chic) Sale, and "The Man Who Played God," the new Arliss production, which has a strong vein of comedy.

Box office receipts in three Western cities for the ten weeks, October 10 to December 12, of this year, are shown in this chart, based upon MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S weekly compilation of theatre returns. The three cities are Hollywood, Los Angeles and San Francisco. The 100 per cent line represents the average receipts in each of the three cities for the period covered.

S.O.S. Company Is Offering New Sound-on-Film Amplifier

The S. O. S. Corporation, film equipment manufacturer of New York, has announced a sound-on-film amplifier which, the company claims, eliminates all batteries, chargers, rectifiers, motor generators and complicated wiring.

Pointing out that sound-on-disc equipment has been favored by small theatres because of the ease and simplicity of installation as compared with sound-on-film equipment, it is claimed the new equipment is less expensive and simpler to install than the disc apparatus.

Big 4 Will Use Magazine Stories for Its Westerns

John R. Frueler, president of Big 4, announces that the remainder of Westerns on the present program will be stories which appear currently in action magazines. Freuler claims that "too many outdoor films, since sound, have been a rehash of silent pictures or of stories popular 15 or 20 years ago which are outdated and unadapted to today's screen."

Fox To Shoot 21 Features During Next Three Months

Fox plans a full production schedule on the Coast of 21 features during the three months of December, January and February. Three are already in production and four others will start this month. Five will go into work in January and three the following month.

Three in work are "Charlie Chan's Chance," "The Gay Bandit" and "Disorderly Conduct." "The Silent Witness," "First Cabin," "After Tomorrow" and "Widow's Might" will go into production during the month.

Rogers Returns From Midwest After Selling "X Marks Spot"

Budd Rogers feature sales manager of Sono Art-World Wide, has returned to the home office from a three weeks' tour of key Middlewestern cities, during which important booking deals were closed.

First run deals on "X Marks the Spot" were concluded in Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Kansas City, Indianapolis and others. These situations are in addition to numerous complete circuit bookings obtained on the same picture.

FROM HOLLYWOOD

By LEO MEEHAN

Talk is revived of independent production, but a good deal of it is the "on the cuff" variety, due to the shortage of capital. Independent producers feel the time is ripe to sell first class independent product profitably, because of curtailed production by the big outfits. Phil Goldstone, long a successful independent operator, is reported to be financing several such projects. The only one actually accounted to date is that his brother, Henry Goldstone, will produce six with Jack Hoxie.

This will be Hollywood's quietest holiday season in many a year, with fewer parties, less lavish whoopee at those contemplated, and many planning the conventional "quiet day at home." Sid Grauman, returning to the helm of the famous Chinese theatre, which he built and opened, will provide most of the Christmas fireworks for the film colony.

Grauman, usually with a new trick up his sleeve, has provided a new one again. It will be a "double premiere" of MGM's "Hell Divers" on Christmas day. Perhaps Sid has been influenced by the wave of double feature billing in other houses. Anyhow, he announces there will be an "afternoon premiere for those who cannot attend the gala evening performance." Prices at the afternoon premiere will be $1 and $1.50, as against the regular matinee prices of 50c, 75c and $1. His evening premiere, attended by the big folk of filmdom, will have a $3 top, as against recent tops of $5 on similar occasions. Grauman also announces an elaborate prologue with 100 people in the cast.

The big success attending local showings of the complete picturization of the Notre Dame-U. S. C. football game (won by the local lads, if you will remember) has been an outstanding event of the week. Following the record-breaking attendance at Loew's State, West Coast houses rushed prints into many outlying second run spots, where business was immediately stimulated. The production, made under the supervision of Director Sam Wood of MGM, is a very interesting spectacle for anyone interested in football. Not only can the audience see every play throughout the entire game at close range, but many of the more spectacular plays are shown in slow-motion, giving even the uninitiated an opportunity to see the marvelous precision and dynamic drive of the perfect football machine.

Incidentally, this same football picture has given birth to the "triple feature bill," topping the present trend to double-featuring. Los Angeles and the outlying communities compose the "preview sector" of the county, where studios try out pictures in the process of final cutting or revision. A number of houses where previews are usually shown already had one feature booked. The sensational business of the football picture resulted in its being rushed in for double billing with the regular feature. Along comes a studio with a preview feature, and presto, audiences are packed in to see three big features in one night! In the past few nights I saw "The Cuban Love Song," Fox's preview of "Dance Team" and the football feature at one house, "Are These Our Children," Paramount's "Dr. Jeykll and Mr. Hyde" and the football opus at another. Long lines waiting at the box office both times—and why not? Incidentally, "Dance Team" and "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" are two of the best films I've seen lately.

Doesn't look like much of a season ahead for "epics." The big, costly productions are being temporarily shelved in favor of productions which can be made for less money, and with less risk of flopping. Radio announced postponement of production on "Frontier," which was to be something like "Cimarron." Instead they will do another story by Howard Estabrook, who adapted "Cimarron" so successfully. It is called "March of a Nation," and is said to offer the suggestion that America buck up commercially and head for new heights of prosperity to come.

Here's the way the new "cold water" system works:

Dorothy Lee, the ingenue, balked at playing the part Radio assigned to her in "Girl Crazy." It wasn't "big enough." Studio said okay, go out on Gower street and look in for a while; then they cast Rochelle Hudson for the role. Dorothy went out and looked in; weather cool; Dorothy cooled. Came back in, apologies; accepted the part; will play it. Tough on Rochelle, but significant of the producers' present state of mind, nevertheless.

Heard here and there:

Wallace Beery has taken in three youngsters, two boys and a girl—adopted the girl and will rear and educate the boys. They are orphaned children of an aunt of Mrs. Beery who died recently. Wally has already bought toy airplanes for the boys!

Columbia is closing for several weeks. Preparation for 1932 production meanwhile, with a possible New York trip for Harry Cohn.

Edward Sutherland, director, cracked up in an auto accident. Three ribs were broken, face and body badly lacerated.

Warners announce they will make six in January and seven in February, completing thirty-two pictures by March 1. Jack says laugh pictures will predominate.

Film Board Plays Santa Role

Twenty needy families were "adopted" this week by the Kansas City Film Board of Trade as part of pre-holiday activities of exchanges in spreading good cheer. Ten exchanges each sponsored relief for two families. Employees brought clothing, toys, books and other usable articles. In addition, the committee drew on its relief fund to purchase groceries, coal and other comforts for the poor.

Summerville Quits Universal

Argument over contractual differences are understood to have brought about Slim Summerville's resignation this week from Universal's player roster.

17 Local Dealers Handling Portable Equipment for RCA

The campaign of RCA Photophone to break open the non-theatrical market for sale of its portable sound reproducers has resulted to date in deals with 17 localized representatives, including:

Stanley & Paterson and Motorized Talking Picture Service, both of New York; Ludwig Hommel & Co., Pittsburgh; Gilham Electric, Atlanta; Leo J. Meyberg Co., Los Angeles; Platt Music, Los Angeles; Aeolian Company, St. Louis; Metropolitan Motion Pictures, Detroit; M. Steinert & Sons, Boston and branches throughout New England; Lyon & Healy, Chicago and Cleveland; Joseph M. Zamoiski, Baltimore and Washington; Electrics, Ltd., Montreal; Westinghouse, Philadelphia; McCarthy Bros. and Ford, Buffalo and Rochester; Frank Edwards Co., Salt Lake City; Johnston Electric Supply, Cincinnati; Harper-Meggee, Seattle; Royal Studio, Grantwood, N. J.

The dealers are selling directly to churches, schools and others in the non-theatrical field. It is expected they will establish non-theatrical film libraries when developments warrant.

Theatres Gain Ground in "Blue" Fight in Kansas

Sunday shows in Kansas scored another victory this week when Judge John C. Pollock in federal court at Kansas City, Kan., ruled against state officials in his decision to continue the temporary injunction obtained by Fox West Coast Theatres.

Judge Pollock based his decision on the fact that the blue law of 1868 is widely disregarded in the state and that to single out one theatre operator for prosecution would be discrimination. He overruled the motion of the attorney general to quash the temporary injunction.

Robinson Denies He Will Succeed Plunkett at RKO

Myron Robinson, theatre executive of RKO in charge of real estate, denied reports current this week that he would succeed Joseph Plunkett as operator of the RKO circuit. Harold B. Franklin was also mentioned as Plunkett's successor, although it is denied at the home office that Plunkett will resign on January 1.

Eastman Settles Custodian Claim

Eastman Kodak has paid $1,885,092 to the U. S. alien property custodian and will not appeal the case involving the sum to the United States Supreme Court.

Money paid represents the outcome of litigation concerning dividends on Kodak stock seized by the custodian during the war.

Three For RKO Southern Group

The RKO Orpheum in Memphis and the RKO Orpheum and Palace in New Orleans have been added to the group of houses operated by the Southern division of RKO, under the direction of Len S. Brown of Dallas.

PASSING IN REVIEW

The department endeavors to set forth two lines of material of service to the exhibitor—first a showman's evaluations of the oustanding pictures—second, reviews of information

"HELL DIVERS." M-G-M seems to have made up its mind that the country has had enough laughs and should do a little crying. To accomplish this feat they have launched an era of "sad endings" and so far Wallace Beery has been batting a hundred per cent.

Here is a picture that is "great" in many, many ways. The shots of the 'planes, the accidents, the bombing of the targets, the handling of the ships, the shots on board the U. S. S. Saratoga, an education in itself; yet they spoil a perfect evening's entertainment with a sad ending that sends you home feeling blue and almost making you forget the extraordinary picture you have just viewed.

WHY?

Sitting back an hour or two after the premiere, I'm still wondering whether the picture would have been improved or impaired by the use of a happier ending, and the vote seems to be in favor of the happy finish. The more I think of it the more convinced I am that it would have made a marvelous picture still more marvelous.

But let's get on to the merchandising possibilities of it.

The title? A hundred percent box office not only because of the title but by reason of the tremendous campaign that can be erected around such a title. Stars, names? Wallace Beery, Clark Gable, Conrad Nagel, Cliff Edwards; ably supported in small, but well acted roles, by Dorothy Jordan, Marjorie Rambeau and Marie Prevost.

Audience value? Another hundred percent (except that doggoned tear-jerking finish). But it will hold their interest for many reasons. The Navy slants and shots aboard the vessel are truly an education to anyone; even at the finish where they have to cut Beery out of the burning plane with asbestos suits. Every thrill imaginable is crammed into this unusual picture. And you can build an entire campaign around each and every incident, so you won't be crying for ideas to sell this one. You'll be wondering how you can use them all without overdoing it.

Kids, grown-ups, and even school authorities, should go for this in a big way. Tie-ups? Impossible to start listing them here. Use your own imagination.

M-G-M, despite that sad ending has given show-business another outstanding achievement in the form of this great box office smash. That's what it's going to be unless I'm waxing too darned enthusiastic. But if you attend one of those trade showings you'll probably rave more yourself.

"PRIVATE LIVES" ought to be one of the real money-making pictures of this season. Not alone has it the stars—Norma Shearer and Robert Montgomery—but it is laugh-provoking entertainment of the finest sort. Of course, in some of the smaller spots where sophisticated stuff is frowned upon, it may find the receipts only so-so, but taking the field as a whole it should reap a harvest of dollars.

I found myself seated in the midst of a flock of women when I viewed the production, and how they screamed and enjoyed that picture would be its grandest recommendation.

The title possess many fine selling slants that immediately stamp it as real b. o. in practically every community. Built up by a showman who knows, it ought to require some extra help in the first runs to handle the crowds that a swell campaign behind a title like this can bring. The women can't get enough of Norma and her gorgeous gowns (and how she can wear 'em), and they go just as strong for Montgomery.

In "audience" value, it's solid entertainment from start to finish with many screamingly funny situations brought about by the ex-wife and husband finding themselves at the same hotel for their second honeymoons.

Reginald Denny and Una Merkle are also excellent in their limited but nevertheless important roles. So that makes the cast 100 per cent.

Just tackle this one with the definite thought in mind that you are going to mop up. Remember, it's the plugging of the good pictures that bring them 'way over the top. Never let them shift for themselves because of their reputations. Sell it strong; avoid any suggestive material in your campaign and watch the dough roll in.

Lay off Sunday and kid days, but outside of that, the road is wide and open.

"HEAVEN ON EARTH." I find it awfully hard to believe that a masterpiece of box office proportions like "Frankenstein" was made by the same company that turned out this one. Here we have a slow, draggy, depressing story, told in a slow, draggy and depressing way and giving you just one hearty laugh, coming when Lew Ayres visits Slim Summerville to buy his girl an engagement ring. Slim panicked them in the brief appearance he made.

The story is about the Shanty Town folks who live down by the river, and do things "that-a-way." It lacks sincerity, and although the direction was capable enough, Russell Mack could hardly do miracles.

The punch is the flood finish with the steamer saving the hero, et al., from "the frenzied waters of the raging Mississippi." It also represents the best selling and exploitation slant.

Title can mean most anything. But after thinking over the possibilities of that title you may decide that the better bet would be Lew Ayres and his past performances.

Audience value is almost nil, yet it may be acceptable for the smaller towns and cities, certainly not for the big city first-runs. It will require plenty of support, but that's not impossible for a manager who knows how to assemble a good evening's entertainment.

O. K. for Sunday if you think it worthy of that spot, but no good for the kids. They won't make head or tail of it.

"MAKER OF MEN" is another football-coach yarn that to me was not going to be any sort of a record breaker. Like "The Spirit of Notre Dame," this one has practically no love or romance interwoven in the story. But "Notre Dame" had a Rockne to eulogize.

The story is convincingly told; acted very well, and OK everywhere along the line except that it is not entertainment in the right sense of the word. It's a sermon on father and son and that the former should be more of a dad and less of the coach to his own son. It's no compliment to the father in this picture that his son had to get a backbone and go to another college to prove he was no coward.

If your cash customers like football pictures post-season, then you can probably build up an excellent campaign along the lines of the sport itself and the father-and-son angle. But my suggestion would be to support it with a carefully selected program of shorts.

Title has as much power for the b. o. as the angles mentioned above can accomplish. But otherwise it can only mean as much as you know how to convey in your advertising and selling of a picture of this kind.

In audience value the picture, as mentioned before, is O.K. but it is hard to put in the genuine entertainment class. Better still, try to get a screening of it the next time you visit your local Columbia Exchange. It will then show you the best and safest paths to take in merchandising it.

Great for the kids, and can play any day of the week. No restrictions along those lines.

Mickey Mouse and his Orphans was by far the best of the screen fare offered at the Roxy this week. It's perfect for the holiday season and the early part of January.

Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde

(Paramount)

Stevenson's Thriller

Fredric March's already great popularity should be measurably increased by his thoroughly magnificent performance of the famous Robert Louis Stevenson character, "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde." Paramount surrounded March with a group of unusually capable players, gave him a gripping screen version of the old masterpiece by Samuel Hoffenstein and Percy Heath, and intrusted the direction to Rouben Mamoulian, who has a real flair for this sort of entertainment. The results are obviously out of the ordinary. It is a distinctive contribution to the present cycle of "horror" thrillers which seems to be upon us.

Largely, of course, it is Fredric March' picture. And how he delivers! He is one of the best actors on the screen today. Those who have doubts need only see how he handles this, one of the most difficult and complex roles ever created to be convinced. Despite the heavy handicap of a somewhat overdone gruesomeness of make-up in the Hyde character—make-up which at times destroys rather than builds the reality of Hyde's monstrosity—March gives it all the fiendishness an audience can stand. So, also, does he point up the high character of his Dr. Jekyll, and the pathetic effort to wrest the good Doctor from the powers of evil. It is a dual role that is outstanding in its intelligent interpretation.

Miriam Hopkins, rapidly becoming one of the foremost luminaries on the Paramount roster, comes next. Her lowbrow romance with the evil Mr. Hyde is a memorable performance. Next in order comes Holmes Herbert, Dr. Jekyll's great and good friend who finally is compelled to destroy his friend to save him; Halliwell Hobbes as the testy old English gentleman who might have prevented tragedy except for his inborn stubbornness; Rose Hobart, hapless fiancee of Dr. Jekyll; and Edgar Norton as the faithful butler. Minor contributions, all well done, are made by Tempe Pigott, Arnold Luce and Colonel MacDonnell.

Rouben Mamoulian's direction is intelligent always, and divertingly adroit at times. However, he has permitted the camera to go utterly wild with "travel shots" which at times are senseless, contributing nothing but optical fatigue, and seriously slowing down the action. Isn't it about time to put a camera back on a tripod instead of mounting it upon a roller coaster? Travel shots have been done to death.

Many have injured the otherwise fine quality of story and performance. There are times when they are effective and appropriate. In the main they add nothing but useless expense which some of these studio efficiency experts might well study. Hollywood critics may call them "arty." The public probably thinks they are pretty tiresome. Karl Struss, a very able cameraman, has made his facile instrument perform some extraordinary gyrations. He probably could have contributed even more effectively and with less personal suffering from mal-de-mer had he been permitted to set it down occasionally.

Hell Divers

(MGM)

Naval Air Drama

A first night audience at the Astor in New York, distinguished and undistinguished, laughed and applauded, sat tense and almost cheered as the Naval Air Forces of the United States swept through their brilliant maneuvers over land and sea, and Wallace Beery and Clarke Gable carried a story thread which, though concluding on a tragic note, left that audience obviously thrilled and almost awed.

The film was done with the cooperation of the United States Navy, and undoubtedly the best shots from the library of the air forces were used here. The flight formations held the audience spellbound as the planes landed on and took off the U.S.S. Saratoga, airship carrier, the Navy's pride. The photographic work in innumerable instances drew gasps from the patrons and murmured comments of praise for the daring fliers who helped to make the picture were continuously audible.

Wallace Beery and Clark Gable are two chief petty officers attached to Squadron One, Beery the old timer, Gable the newcomer. Both are observors and gunners for the squadron's two leaders and the rivalry is more than keen between the two, since Beery sees Gable usurping his position and Gable wants just that. Their work in the leading roles was received with enthusiasm by the first-nighters at the Astor. Hardly less so was that of Conrad Nagel as one of the squadron commanders, John Miljan as the other commander whose arm is amputated after a thrilling crash in the air; Marjorie Rambeau as the Panama cafe proprietor who is Beery's "best girl." Landers Stevens, Dorothy Jordan as Gable's fiancee, Cliff Edwards as Beery's pal, Reed Howes, Alan Roscoe, all have less important roles, but all were acclaimed by the audience for their support.

The air squadron goes to Panama, after Miss Jordan had broken with Gable because of a bit of horseplay with another woman staged by Beery. At Panama, Beery, whose living performance won the patrons completely, gets into trouble as usual and, disciplined, is reduced in rank. The squadron takes off for maneuvers and Nagel, relenting, takes Beery as his observer and bomber, while Gable rides another plane in the same capacity. Gable's ship crumbles in the air, and dropping in a parachute, he is thrown on the rocks of an isolated stretch of coast. Beery sees the accident and he and Nagel go down after him. The audience gasped as the plane swept down to a perfect three-point landing among the rocks of the beach.

Nagel is badly hurt in the rescue effort and Gable's leg is broken. Four days of waiting bring nothing but the news on their receiving set that the search has been abandoned. Unable to fly a plane as pilot, Beery loads the two men into the ship, nevertheless, and after a tense session of flying through heavy fog, which thrilled the premier crowd, brings the plane down on the Saratoga's deck in a crashing plunge which wrecks the ship and sets it afire. They are rescued, but Beery is too badly burned.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Directed by George Hill. Story by Frank Wead. Screen play by Harvey Gates and Malcolm Stuart Boylan. Added dialogue by James K. McGuinness and Ralph Graves. Aerial photography by Charles A. Marshall. Photographed by Harold Wenstrom. Editor, Blanche Sewell. Release date, January 16, 1932. Running time, 113 minutes.

Private Lives

(MGM)

Comedy-Drama

Metro offers a film version of Noel Coward's smart comedy which played the Broadway boards for many weeks, first with Coward himself and Gertrude Lawrence in the leads and again later with Madge Kennedy and Otto Kruger as the bickering couple whose petty arguments led to divorce, who are thrown together by accident when both are on different honeymoons, and who finally bicker themselves out and into a reconciliation which at the end looks as though it might stick.

On the screen Robert Montgomery and Norma Shearer, handsome and attractive, respectively, handle the roles which made New York's followers of the legitimate laugh for many successive weeks. From the manner in which an audience at the New York Capitol chuckled and snorted, laughed and gurgled, at the rolling smart lines and the amusing, often absurd situations of the sophisticated comedy, which occasionally approaches farce, it was evident that Miss Shearer and Montgomery did remarkably well with the dual lead.

A brisk flurry of applause at the conclusion of the film, often unheard at the playing of a film at a Broadway house, indicated further the thorough manner in which the assembled patrons enjoyed themselves at the perigrinations of the couple, ably aided and abetted, comment later made it clear by Una Merkel as the whimpering damsel whom Montgomery married and by Reginald Denny as the rather simpering Englishman who had fallen for and to the lot of Miss Shearer.

The wider scope possible in transferring such an out-and-out stage piece to the screen, was evident by the well-taken opportunities for the injection of deeper interior sets and a bit of splendid Alpine mountain scenery. When the two couples meet accidentally, Montgomery and Miss Shearer on impulse leave their respective wife and husband flat and repair to a mountain camp in the Alps. Particularly amusing is their decision to use a key word to call a halt and impose silence if they should again repeat their meaningless quarrels, and their use of that word.

The outraged husband and wife, Denny and Miss Merkel, find them after a particularly violent and deliciously amusing battle, literally, and the following morning, when the pursuers entangle themselves in just such a verbal combat as the leading players thought was their prior right, the divorcees see the light and escape, bag and baggage, leaving the other couple enjoyably breaking records and things over each other's heads.

The play was obviously followed meticulously in the matter of business and lines, and if audience reaction be any criterion, the decision to do just that, was a most happy one on the part of Sidney Franklin, director, since the Capitol's numerous patrons gave every evidence of having had a grand time.

Produced and distributed by MGM. Directed by Sidney Franklin. Author, Noel Coward. Scenario, Hans Kraly, Richard Schayer. Continuity, Claudine West. Cameraman, Ray Binger. Editor, Conrad A. Nervig. From the Noel Coward play. Release date, December 12, 1931. Running time, 85 minutes.

Safe in Hell

(First National)

Drama

Dorothy Mackaill, who starred in First National's "Chickie," has a role similar in some respects in "Safe in Hell," which, as Gilda Karlson, "more sinned against than sinning," she chooses hanging in preference to the advances of a prison keeper on an island of outcasts. The story is from the play by Huston Branch, the adaptation and dialogue being by Joseph Jackson and Maude Fulton.

Gilda is sent by the woman employing her to entertain someone (Ralf Harolde) who is "lonely," and finds the someone is the man whose advances caused her to lose her place as servant in his home. She repulses him, but a lamp is overturned and the man supposedly dies in the fire. Her sweetheart, Carl (Don Cook), returns between sea trips in time to help her escape and leaves her on an isle in the Caribbean which has become a haven for criminals because the government knows no extradition laws. They perform their own wedding, as there is no priest on the island.

She successfully overturns the plots of the men to win her, until the prison keeper (Morgan Wallace) leaves a pistol with her in order to arrest her later. He already has hidden a letter in which her sweetheart sent her money. Then the man who originally destroyed her respectability appears. He makes advances and Gilda shoots him. One of the outcasts, once a famous attorney, successfully pleads her case. But then the prison keeper tells of the arrest to follow for carrying concealed weapons. Rather than be his prey, Gilda rushes back to court and falsely declares she committed murder.

Produced by First National. Adaptation and dialogue by Joseph Jackson and Maude Fulton from the stage play by Huston Branch. Directed by William A. Wellman. Release date, December 12. Running time, 75 minutes.

Maker of Men

(Columbia)

Football Drama

Columbia offers its contribution to the screened football dramas of the current season, with the leads handled by Jack Holt, stern visaged as ever, and more so as the coach to whom a quitter is the worst possible specimen of humanity, and Richard Cromwell as the son who lacks the inelegant but all-expressive "guts" to the shame of his father, but who comes back to prove himself a man. New York saw the film at the Roxy.

Cromwell, for whom the father, "old man" of Western's football team, has dreams of gridiron greatness, realizes himself lacking in those qualities most essential when his father puts him on the squad. He is unable to stand punishment and is in constant fear and much ashamed. After losing one game through his exhibition of "yellowness," he tries to leave the team, but his father, though realizing on his part that the failure of the team in a crucial game will lead to his being forced out by the alumni, puts the boy into the game, which is again lost, and for the same reason.

The shame of his treatment on the campus next day is the worst punishment of all, and the boy suddenly develops backbone. Turning in his suit, he leaves college to enroll with the rival school, while Holt insists on completing his two-year contract as Western's mentor.

At the end of that two years we again are taken to the gridiron for the crucial game, pictured, as is the previous contest, through the use of judiciously selected newsreel shots of an actual big game, interspersed with close-ups of the individual characters in the story. Unexpectedly, to Holt, is the appearance of the son he had thrown out, on the opposing team. The boy, rather as expected, runs wild, running back a kick for a touchdown and later, by a series of crashing line plays and startling catching of forward passes, succeeds, practically single-handed, in defeating his father's team and, automatically, we are given to understand, causing his father to lose all hope of a renewal of his coaching contract.

Cromwell is hurt on the last play and as his father goes to him in the rival dressing room, we see a reconciliation, where the father realizes, with great satisfaction, that, though he had lost his position as a major football coach, he had won, in his son, a real man, and a "chip off the old block." Obviously meant to point in the nature of a moral, the film bends every effort in that direction, and we have a characterization on the part of Cromwell, rather than a spectacular, or action-packed football story.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Directed by Edward Sedgwick. Story by Howard J. Green, Edward Sedgwick. Adaptation and dialogue by Howard J. Green. Cameraman, L. William O'Connell. Sound, Glenn Rominger. Editor, Gene Milford. Release date, December 25, 1931. Running time, 67 minutes.

Union Depot

(Seen in Hollywood)

First National's "Union Depot" is so realistic you can almost smell the coal smoke as the great locomotives roll in and out. Every other sense of reality is satisfied. Banging gates, hissing steam, grinding wheels, orotund chanting of train callers, all as though televised and sound-carried from any great real terminal.

Light filtering down from murky windows high above . . . crowds scurrying hither and yon like anthill denizens . . . confusion, turmoil, by the alchemy of organization becoming order and direction. Over all engine bells clanging in triumphant jangling symphony.

Such is the scene, and its symbols, by the direction of Alfred E. Green, are reflected in the human episodes happening swiftly in the huge depot as the trains roll in and out. Or perhaps it is human life that reflects itself in the swift and strident scene. Whichever, or both, the result was termed excellent and reasonable. The depot exists on the screen as a microcosm to the world of men and women, loving, hating, hoping, losing, striving—living each as best he can according to his light, or hers.

The film story comes to the screen with action dominant, and capably, it was indicated, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., takes advantage of his role as a tender-tough young hobo who tries to be a gentleman for a day. Joan Blondell was thought equally sincere and convincing—beautiful and appealing, too—in her part of the stranded chorus girl whom the hero 'bo tries to help to Salt Lake City.

David Landau talks as the detective, as though the words were those of his own thought. Guy Kibbee wins laughs as another and elder vagrant. The cast, throughout its length, including the many who play revealing bits contributes to the artistic success of the picture. The dialogue, by John Bright and Kubec Glasmon, is in key with the rest of it.

Produced and distributed by First National. Based on play by Laurie, Fowler and Durkin, adapted by Kenyon Nicholson and Walter DeLeon. Dialogue by Bright and Glasmon. Alfred E. Green, director. Al Alborn, assistant. Sol Polito, photographer. Jack Okey, art director. Jack Killifer, film editor. Release date, January 23, 1932.

Night Beat

(Action Pictures)

Drama

Though gangs and their methods have rather a good bit to do with this, the fifth on Action's schedules of the season's productions, there is nevertheless much, and undoubtedly sufficient to remove the stigma of gangdom films from this effort. A moral is definitely pointed from the start and logically carried through to a conclusion, which, rather unexpected in that it does not follow the anticipated and usual formula, serves to make the picture stronger by its divergence. The rule of the gang must fall, is the film's theme.

Jack Mulhall, Patsy Ruth Miller, Walter McGrail and Harry Cording handle the leading roles in what was definitely thought to be a satisfactory manner. Harry Semels, portraying an excitable Italian tailor, victim of the gang's "shakedown" racket, offers a character role in good style, it was indicated.

A sequence in the nature of a prologue pictures one soldier on the battlefield rescuing a wounded comrade. McGrail, rescuer, becomes the district attorney in the big city whose efforts to clean the gang-infested town are unavailing. Mulhall, rescued, becomes the gang leader who enters the town with his "mob" to take the territory from Cording. He is summoned to the district attorney's office and McGraill exacts a promise, based on the previous obligation, that Mulhall help in cleaning the city. He is made chief of detectives.

Miss Miller is engaged to McGrail, but meeting Mulhall, falls in love with him and informs McGrail of the fact. The latter takes it in good part, and the two go on in their housecleaning. The opportunity comes, when Mulhall, who has been relegated to an outlying precinct as captain through Corday's influence, traps the gang in a jewelry store holdup and shoots it out with them, his police aiding.

The gang is beaten, but Mulhall is fatally wounded. Dying in the hospital, he tells McGrail and Miss Miller that he had actually planned to do the straight thing as a police officer.

Produced and distributed by Action Pictures. Directed by George B. Seitz. Presented by Ralph M. Like. Supervisor, Cliff Broughton. Story, adaptation, W. Scott Darling. Cameraman, Jules Cronjager. Editor, Byron Robinson. Release date, December 12, 1931. Running time, 62 minutes.

SHORTS

Moonlight and Cactus

(Educational)

Good

Tom Patricola, playing the comedy lead, is sufficiently amusing in the manner in which he puts his material across to have the patrons indulging in more than a few hearty laughs and numerous surreptitious giggles. William Goodrich directed. A laugh-provoking comedy. —Running time, 20 minutes.

The Riding Master

(Vitaphone)

Good

Poodles Hannaford exhibits his real mastery as a rider, while Madge Evans lends him satisfactory support. The short is in reality an exhibition of riding, well done and entertaining. —Running time, 9 minutes.

Second Childhood

(Vitaphone)

Fair

Becoming annoyed at the flute concert she has staged for her guests, the hostess arranges that the same guests shall disport themselves in the dress and manners of their childhood. When the husband comes home, he is actually driven from the house by the infantile pranks of the assembled "children." Makes for fair comedy.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Musical Justice

(Paramount)

Good

Rudy Vallee sits in court as the judge, and his band, in action, plays the jury, as various types of music and singers are placed on trial. In song, Vallee makes his charge, in song the defendant answers, and in orchestration the jury decides, to present a novel idea and an entertaining short number.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Any Rags

(Paramount)

Amusing

A good animated cartoon, in which little Bimbo, rag picker, sings a song as he trundles his rag cart about the animated streets of the animated city. He wins the heart of the fair maiden, and the junk on the cart strangely turns into an animated home. Good for light spot anywhere.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Gioachino Rossini

(Fitzpatrick)

Quality

An episode from the life of the great composer Rossini forms the subject of this interesting short subject. Nathaniel Shilkret and his Victor Concert Orchestra renders various selections from the most famous of Rossini's operatic compositions as a background for the incident in his life pictured silently. An audience at the New York Criterion applauded the number.

Cowboy Cabaret

(RKO Pathe)

Enjoyable

A rather enjoyable cartoon, in which the animated animals of Aesop's Fables disport themselves in true western style. Good sound synchronization and a novel twist or two, make for a slightly different and quite amusing cartoon.—Running time, 7 minutes.

THE mail bag is spilling over with letters on the Junior Show. Letters of inquiry, letters of suggestion, and occasionally messages of disgust, have poured into our office. Reduced theatre audiences may have something to do with it. Theatre managers, with an eye to the future, have foreseen the possibilities in increased juvenile audiences. They are willing to catch at any straw that may help them to build up a new and pleased patronage. Within the past year we have witnessed an enormously constructive activity among clubwomen. Practically every community boasts a motion picture chairman, whose duty it is to cooperate with the theatre manager for Junior Matinees, Family Night Programs and the occasional special show for children. In some localities these efforts have produced astonishing results; motion picture clubs have sprung into being, and children in thousands have poured into the theatre announcing the Junior Show. On the other hand, we hear from some discouraged managers that they have made the brave attempt but have found the project resting heavily and expensively on their hands. Their local clubwomen, after the first burst of enthusiasm, deserted the ship.

Those managers who have had experience with programs for children have learned that it requires wisdom, tact and the utmost carefulness in selection to present a program on the advertised occasions that will meet with all the requirements of the organized groups, the schools, churches, and the highly critical taste of the young people themselves. They also realize that it is necessary to win the respect and active cooperation of club leaders if their children's programs are to be properly sponsored and developed as a community enterprise.

The definite success of this whole work lies in the finer meshing of gears. It is highly important that organized groups and theatre men be introduced to one another and helped to a fair and businesslike understanding of their common interest. MOTION PICTURE HERALD believes that it holds a key to the situation, because through this department it has become a clearing house for both sides of the question. It is our definite purpose to build up and to strengthen a civic interest in better motion pictures and a friendlier relationship between the theatre and its critics.

In next week's issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD a section devoted to the Junior Show will present the pros and cons of the situation. In the meanwhile, it may be helpful to those who are already working for young people's entertainment to note the outstanding holidays and dates of educational interest which will occur in January, which might be featured on the screen and platform musically, dramatically —and appropriately!

January's Suitability

All nations observe the first day of the New Year in an especial manner. It marks the turning point of the calendar observed by the Christian countries of the world. Various religious groups observe the coming of a New Year in their own especial manner. The Jewish civil new year, which opens with the month, Tishri, corresponding in a general way to our month of September, is called Feast of Trumpets. Among the Chinese, the day is the greatest festival of the year, falling, according to their lunar calendar, between January 10th and February 19th.

An appropriate short feature which may be ordered from your local exchange on short notice is "The Year" (Four Seasons), RKO-Pathe, one reel. It is music with pictures, directed and edited by Joseph O'Sullivan.

The first week in January holds the birthdays of Paul Revere and Jakob Ludwig Karl Grimm, both heroes of importance to juveniles. "The Ride of Paul Revere" has made that hero's accomplishments important to all children. Short features of significance for the date are:

"Paul Revere" (comedy) Universal, 1 reel
"Yankee Doodle Boy," RKO-Pathe, 1 reel

January 12th is the birthday of Charles Perrault, who, like Grimm, endowed childhood with priceless stories and fables. To this kindly Frenchman we owe "Cinderella," "Puss in the Boots," "Little Red Riding Hood," "Bluebeard" and the other immortal tales of the world of make believe. The Brothers Grimm, Hans Christian Anderson, and Perrault can well be honored in January with a fairy program by reading some of their tales, or by a pageant of their reincarnated characters.

FEATURES:
"Peter Pan" (Betty Bronson) Para., 10 reels, silent
"Alice in Wonderland," Unique Foto Productions

SHORTS:
"Booklovers" (fantasy) Paramount, 1 reel
"Enchanted Forest" (dancing fairies) Tiffany, 1 reel
"Holiday in Storyland," Warner, 1 reel
"Merry Dwarfs" (Disney cartoon) Columbia, 1 reel
"Story Book Parade," Paramount, 1 reel
"Cinderella" (Krazy Kat cartoon) Columbia, 1 reel
"Cinderella Blues" (Fable) RKO-Pathe, 1 reel
"Country School" (Cartoon of Mary's Lamb) Universal, 1 reel
"Fairyland Follies" (Fable) RKO-Pathe, 1 reel
"Family Shoe" (Fable of Old Woman Who Lived in a Shoe) RKO-Pathe
"In Wonderland" (Cartoon) Universal, 1 reel
"Mother Goose Melodies" (Silly Symphony) Columbia
"Red Riding Hood" (Fable) RKO-Pathe, 1 reel

Saturday, January 16th is an outstanding date for young people. The birthday of Benjamin Franklin, printer, journalist, scientist, inventor, philosopher, philanthropist, statesman, diplomat and author, is an occasion worth emphasizing to school children. It would be suitable to invite as guests of honor for this occasion newspaper editors, printers, teachers and students of journalism. This is an excellent way in which to promote a contest among children for the best essay on "Benjamin Franklin's Contribution to America."

An excellent short feature which would give immediate interest to your program is "Benjamin Franklin" (comedy) Universal, one reel.

Thrift Week

Benjamin Franklin was a doctor of wisdom in the matters of thrift. "Thrift Week" was an outgrowth of the World War, sponsored by the United States Treasury Department. In this year more than in other years, the doctrine of thrift is of praticular importance. In many states, Departments of Education distribute pamphlets on the teaching of thrift. If your state is one of these it would be valuable to present this literature to your young people. Invite a local banker to explain the value of thrift and children's part in school banking. It might also be helpful to invite local public schools to exhibit thrift posters in your foyer. Fox Films, through their Fox Leaders Club members, are planning Thrift parades in many localities. The children dressed in "coin" or "bank" costumes, will be led by Boy Scout Drum and Bugle Corps, and will carry Thrift banners.

January 19th is the anniversary of the birthday of Robert Edward Lee. Two days later the birthday of Thomas Jonathan (Stonewall) Jackson occurs. These combined dates offer opportunity for the presentation of some excellent historical pictures. The pictures of Robert E. Lee and Stonewall Jackson, draped in flags, would make a suitable foyer display. Invite local club leaders and teachers as guests of honor. Suitable features would be:

FEATURES:
"Abraham Lincoln," United Artist, 8280 feet
"Uncle Tom's Cabin," Universal, 12 reels, synchronized
"Hallelujah" (Negro Life) MGM, 9555 feet

SHORTS:
"Deep South" (Negro spirituals) RKO-Pathe, 1 reel
"Dixie Days" (Uncle Tom-Fable) RKO-Pathe, 1 reel
"Lincoln," RKO-Pathe
"Plantation," Tiffany, 2 reels

Saturday, January 24th commemorates the discovery of gold in California—a date of breathless excitement in the making of United States history. Western states should not let this day pass in silence. The occasion offers an excellent opportunity to submit essays on national development, in which students might tell the story of the daring and the courage of those men who braved the wilderness.

FEATURES:
"The Lash" (Spanish, California 1846), First National, 7110 feet
"Big Trail" (Pioneer epic) Fox, 9720 feet
"Fighting Caravans" (California pioneers) Paramount, 8566 feet

SHORTS:
"Little Covered Wagon," Tiffany, 2 reels
"My West" (Scenic of West coast) Paramount, 1 reel

The birthday of Robert Burns occurs on January 25th. To many people this is a day of particular significance. It should be an anniversary of importance to high school students.

FEATURES:
"Lady of the Lake" (Scottish chieftains in fifteenth century) All Star, 5 reels, synchronized
"Cohens and Kelleys in Scotland" (Comedy) Universal, 7432 feet, synchronized.

SHORTS:
"Songs of Scotland," RKO-Pathe, 1 reel
"I Love a Lassie" (Scotch ballad by Sir Harry Lauder) MGM, 1 reel.

The last week in January is a week in which to commemorate great musical themes. Mozart's birthday is January 27th; Franz Shubert's January 31st; Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy's occurs a few days later on February 3d. This would be a very appropriate time to hold a musical anniversary honoring three great masters. Teachers of music, members of glee clubs, dancing masters, school and church people, will be interested in the presentation of a cultural program for this occasion. A successful tie-up might be made with a local music store. Suitable films would be:

FEATURES:
"Melody Man," Columbia 5781 feet, talking

SHORTS:
Famous Composer Series, Paramount, 1 reel each,
"Schubert's Friends"
"Schubert's Inspiration"
"Schubert's Masterpiece"
"Schubert's Songs"
"Schubert's Unfinished Symphony"
"Chords of Memory" (Scenic) Paramount, 1 reel
"Opery House" (Mickey Mouse cartoon) Columbia
"Austria," RKO-Pathe

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The generally expected falling off in box office grosses during the Christmas holiday season is reflected in the HERALD'S compilation for the current calendar week, ending December 19. The total for 178 theatres in 30 key cities over the country reached $2, 173, 469, a decrease of $206,312 from the $2,379,781 total for 179 theatres in 30 cities for the previous calendar week, ended December 12. One new high individual figure and 14 new lows emphasize the holiday influence this week, as compared with four new highs and four new lows last week. The new high for the current week was recorded at the RKO in Los Angeles, where Radio's "Secret Service" drew $18,500 at the box office.

"PAPA, what is SHOWMANSHIP?"

If you tell him it's hanging out a banner, you're crazy!

(So what? Turn here please and see!)

SHOWMANSHIP starts

On the Screen

INSIDE YOUR THEATRE!

Try this test:

LOOK back over some recent weeks
AT your house—

Are you satisfied with the business you did? If you were in the red—why? If you only broke even—why?

EXAMINE those programs carefully—
LOOKING back now don't you agree
THAT if you had built up your show
WITH carefully planned
SHORT subjects—
You could have improved business!

WE know you could have improved business—
WE have seen it happen in HUNDREDS of theatres, with the USE OF M-G-M SHORTS—

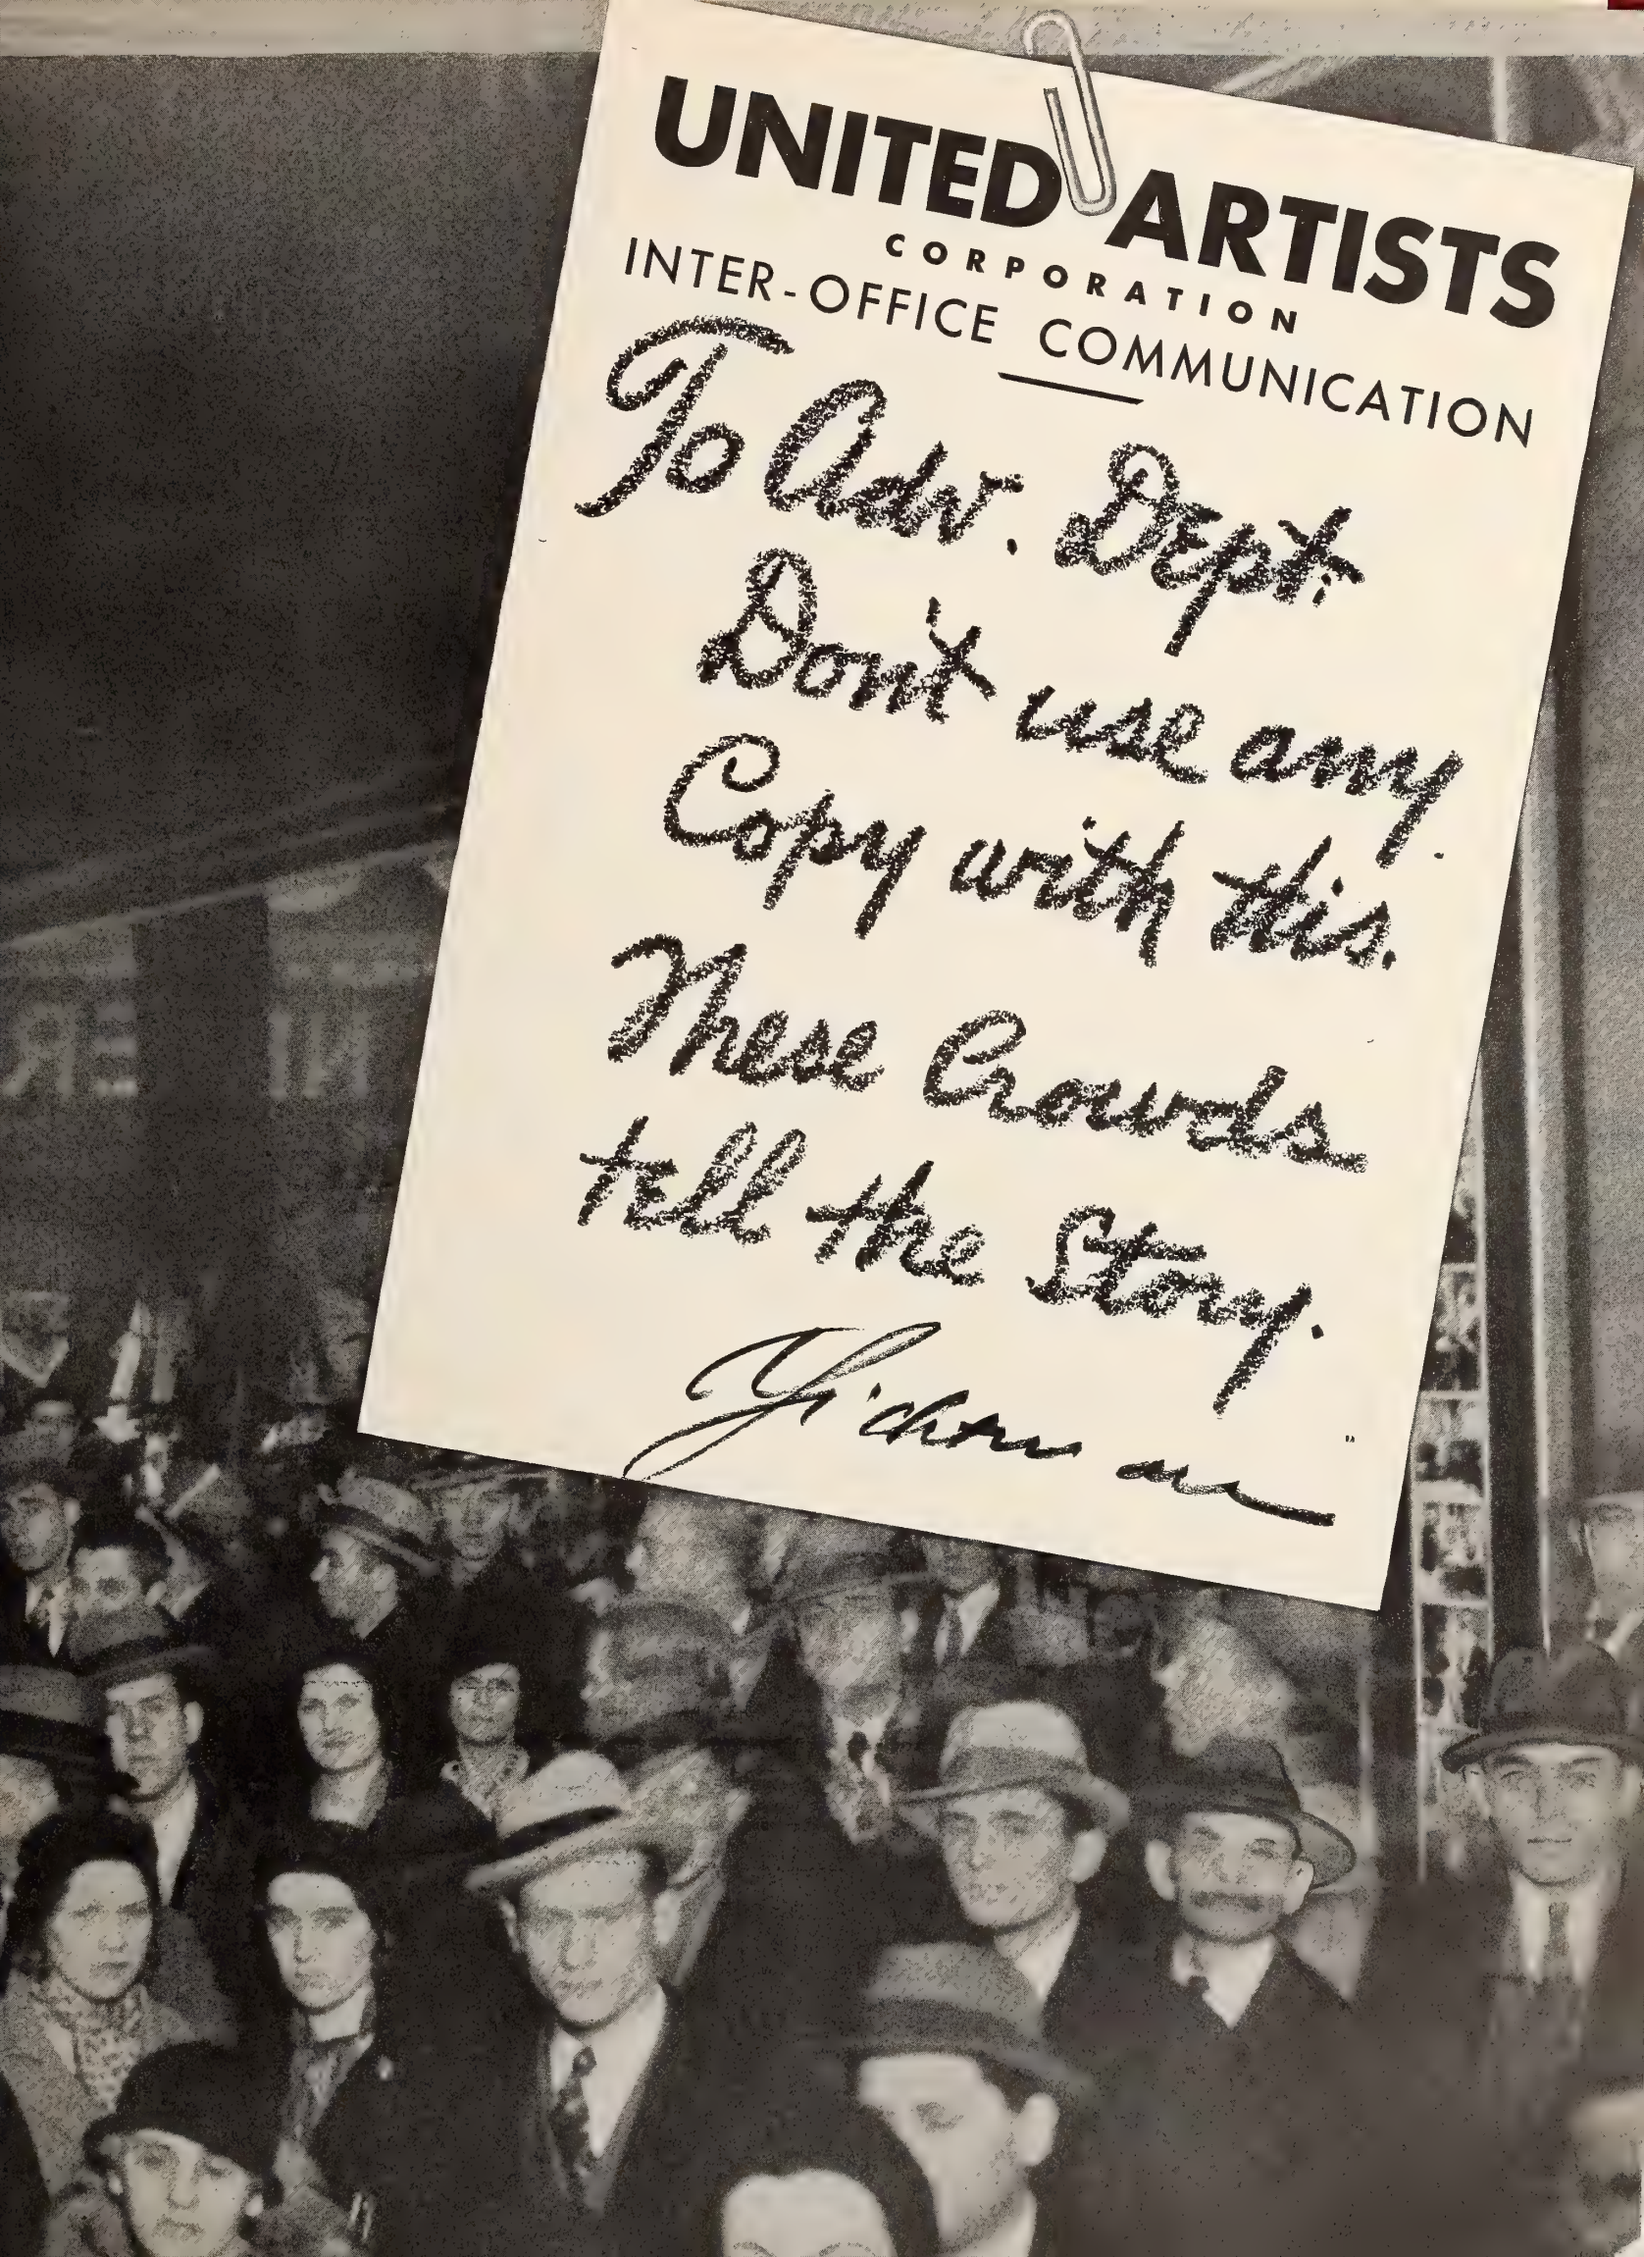
Let's start our showmanship on the screen and hang out banners afterwards!



Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has what you need:

HAL ROACH M-G-M COMEDIES: ZASU PITTS—THELMA TODD (8); BOY FRIENDS (8); "OUR GANG" (8); CHARLIE CHASE (8); LAUREL-HARDY (8); DOGVILLE COMEDIES (3); FITZPATRICK TRAVELTALKS (13); HARRY LAUDER (4); FLIP THE FROG (12); SPORT CHAMPIONS (12); FISHERMAN'S PARADISE (6); HEARST METROTONE NEWS (104).

THE EMBLEM OF PERFECT SOUND
RCA PHOTOPHONE INC SOUND EQUIPMENT

J. C. JENKINS
MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Dear "J. C.":
Do you happen to know Charley Koerner, Vice-President and General Manager of Redwood Theatres, Inc., operators of a chain of theatres in California? If you don't, you should. If you do, I am sure you would bet on anything he said. Charley is a strong booster for RCA Photophone and he doesn't make any bones about it. Here's a letter we received from him recently:

"It is rather refreshing that in these times of poor business to find that our average receipts are maintaining a fairly good average and that in spite of the present economic depression, we are running considerably ahead of our total volume of last year.

"We attribute a great deal of this success to the quality of the sound in our various theatres. The uniformity of favorable comments, together with the satisfaction of our patrons has been a tremendous big contributing factor to this condition.

"At the present time, we have eight RCA Photophone installations. Some of these have been operating for two and a half years and all for at least one year and it is noteworthy that during all this time, we have never had a silent moment on any of our screens.

"There has been a minimum of trouble and a maximum of quality. We are pleased to congratulate RCA Photophone on the quality of their installations, the type of their service and the calibre of their personnel."

Now that you are headed toward San Francisco, why don't you drop in and see Charley? He'll give you an earful about RCA Photophone sound equipment and it won't be a "tearful little earful" either.

Yours for a Merry Christmas, "J. C."

JENKINS' COLYUM

Portland, Ore.

DEAR HERALD:

This town of Portland is a delightful city, at certain seasons of the year, but right now, for one to enjoy the climate at its fullest, he should have web feet and fins. We have been watching the sea gulls now for two weeks and they are beautiful birds. Seattle brags about her Puget Sound and Totem Poles and refers to Portland as "that inland village," and Portland says "You ought to see Mt. Hood and our rose carnival," while Los Angeles includes Multnomah Falls, Crater Lake and Old Faithful Geyser as some of the beautiful spots to be seen in and around Los Angeles.

We never like to hear a fella brag on his home town: that's the reason why we seldom refer to Doc Reynold's drug store, Otto Hartman, the village Sherlock, and the Owl Club in Jess Winn's garage, but somehow the farther we get away from Nebraska the more we feel like a durn furriner.

We will have to say, however, that Portland is an up-to-date city populated by some of the best people on earth with not a single speakeasy that we have been able to find up to now. She has all the theatres she ought to have and they are as beautiful as there is any sense in their being, and if these Portland people want anything better than that they will have to move to Nebraska and take their chances; we guarantee nothing.

F. K. Haskell is the man responsible for all matters of importance in Portland appearing in the HERALD. We found him "Johnnie-at-the-rat-hole" smelling out news, what am news, and we are indebted to him for a whole lot of educational conversation and other courtesies. He's a boy worth knowing. We missed him the other time we were here and he put up a squawk about it, but we don't intend missing him again.

Through the courtesy of the Fox manager we saw a screening of the Fox picture, "Over the Hill." We doubt if the reviewers give this a very large bunch of stars because of the absence of "sex" and "spice" in the picture, but wait until the small-town audiences get a look at it, then listen to what they say.

Last night we were invited by the MGM manager to witness a preview of "Ben-Hur." This is a reissue of the "Ben-Hur" we played something like 10 years ago, with the addition of music and sound effects which added materially to the value of the picture. "Ben-Hur" ought to draw well where the picture has not been played lately. It has no dialogue.

This day it hasn't rained for the last thirteen minutes. We saw a cartoon in the paper picturing an old Puritan with a stovepipe hat and a blunderbuss over his shoulder coming out of the brush lugging a turkey. Why the dickens don't these cartoonists give us modern boys a break occasionally? We can go out in the woods and bag an old gobbler just as well as those Plymouth Rock guys. If they don't stop this we are going to take the matter up with the navy.

If you haven't read Smedley D. Butler's article in the December 5th issue of Liberty you better get it and read it. This article confirms a long-standing belief of ours that if you want to be in the "Who's Who" in the marines or navy you must get your gold braid, brass buttons and egotism at Annapolis.

During these times, if there are any of you theatre boys who are finding it hard to keep the old craft afloat while she is shipping some heavy seas, don't go up into the "crow's nest" and sing "Rock of Ages Cleft for Me," but if you have any music left in you and you feel like singing at all, get up there and sing "Pull for the Shore, Sailor, Pull for the Shore."

To be a soloist in a jazz orchestra all you will need is plenty of wind and a hell-uva poor conception of music.

Mr. Geller, of Geller's theatre here in Portland, gives it as his belief that bad titles of pictures are responsible for keeping more people away from theatres than a smallpox sign. He's right about it. We have been trying to emphasize this for some time and we are glad to find one other person in the business who agrees with us.

The motion picture business is the only business in the world where the customer pays his money without knowing what he is going to get. In fact, he hasn't the slightest idea, and the hope for the future of the business lies in the gambling spirit of the American people—they are willing to take a chance.

We just picked up an old issue of the HERALD and saw a picture of our old friend Sherm Fitch, branch manager for RKO in Omaha. Sherm is one of the popular managers of that metropolis, especially with the ladies, but he is an easy mark on the golf links. Sherm learned to tell the truth early in life and the habit has stuck to him in spite of the fact that he is selling film service.

Our niece has been trying to explain to us how she is going to have a cupboard built in her kitchen, but we can't understand it, so she gave it up finally and said: "Well, Uncle Jack, you must be twins, for one person couldn't be so dumb." Now isn't that discouraging when a fella's own relatives don't have any confidence in his judgment?

According to the California press, Mayor Walker has got that state all "het up" by his recent visit there in behalf of Tom Mooney. The San Francisco Examiner said editorially: "It might be a good idea for the Mayor to go back to New York and make a beginning of attending to his own business." If a Nebraskan and an outsider might be permitted to suggest, it would be that if Mayor Jimmy would look after the bomb throwers, racketeers and plug-uglies of his own city he would find less time to interfere in the affairs of the state of make-believe, tourists and pomegranates. Mayor Jimmy may be a "hot shot" in New York, but he will be a cold potato out here in California.

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

THOUGHTS FOR THE NEW YEAR

HERE we are at another milestone in the big parade of years. And 1931 certainly held plenty of surprises for showbusiness and showmen. What with a wholesale buying and selling of circuits; independents passing out of the picture in many spots throughout the country; new executives taken hold of the reins and, naturally, the change in management generally brought about by such new executives.

We don't know just what this past year has held for YOU; maybe it was headaches and grief; or perhaps, and I'm hoping, it was promotion and happy days. But regardless of how your inventory sizes up before the old year finally rings out, take stock of your present resources and if you've never made a resolution before in your life, resolve that one year from today you will have advanced yourself in every way.

Instead of kidding yourself along with a whole string of impossible things that you are NOT going to do, try selecting just one or two that you intend to live up to. Aim at that district manager's berth you longed for; strive for the time when that pay envelope will mean a darned sight more than fifty or seventy-five a week. There are many jobs in this business where a couple of hundred is the minimum for hard, conscientious effort and you don't have to stop until you climb higher.

OUR hats are off to Fred Weiler of the Victory Theatre in Bayside, L. I., a New York City suburb. And for many good reasons, too.

Taking a half million dollar playhouse built five years ahead of the community; trying to get patrons interested enough to get to that house via an almost backwoods trail (you'd hardly call it a road), then slowly but surely, despite many, many handicaps, building it up so that today it attracts attention and patronage from sections five or more miles away. And they do take that backwoods trail to get to it.

We have watched this theatre almost from the time it opened its doors and frankly expected it to be the champion flop of the city. Well, it's far from a huge success, but as much as has been accomplished is entirely due to the untiring efforts and excellent showmanship of Weiler.

Fred has promised to pass along the details of one of his best business building ideas for early publication in the Club section.

THE importance of saving money was forcibly brought home to me just the other day when an out-of-town showman arrived in the city for the purpose of securing a small theatre of his own. This he expected to do with his savings of a thousand dollars.

The proposition he had in mind and described to me sounded like a good one and certainly worth trying. But I had to point out to this man that his thousand dollars would never get him to first base despite the fact that he could purchase the lease for only eight hundred dollars.

What I told him might mean something to you other fellows who may have this same thought in mind.

After paying the eight hundred for the lease he would have two hundred left. He needed, before he took possession, the first month's rent, amounting to about four hundred and fifty; the cost of the first week's film, to be paid in advance, amounting to another two hundred and twenty-five, and then there was an electric deposit, in this case almost two hundred, to say nothing of a cash reserve to carry on with until the house shows a little profit.

He went back to his job a wiser man but one determined to save every cent he could so that one day he would have that theatre of his own.

There's no moral or preaching in this story; it is merely meant to convey how useful the almighty dollar can be when it's needed. Try that "thrift" idea yourself and see what a kick you get out of it.

WE'VE spent many a happy hour together, you boys back of the guns and your chairman at Club headquarters. Every one of your letters has been like a personal visit from you. And your comment about the Club and what we are trying our best to accomplish for all of our members has always been a source of inspiration.

Let's make up our minds that the new year will bring another fifty-two weeks of warm friendship and happy hours for all of us. Let's look forward to each week's issue of the Club section, where we can gather round that mythical Round Table and chat about our problems, our achievements, and everything close to our hearts in this business of dispensing entertainment to the communities we serve.

It's from the very bottom of my heart, boys: God Bless You All and a Very Happy and Healthy New Year to you and yours.

"CHICK"

BOSTON BLOCK PARTY WAS BIG SUCCESS!

When "Street Scene" played Loew's State Theatre in Boston, Mass., Manager Joe Brennan arranged to hold a real street scene in front of the house. Myriad electric lights strung across from theatre to roofs of houses on the opposite side of street gave the event the appearance of a wop festival, and local talent entertained the gatherers with a variety of acrobatic tricks. The stunt materially aided the splendid gross hung up by the house on this occasion.

EVANS DAVIS DOING GOOD WORK FOR THE STRAND, DOLGEVILLE

Cheerful words from cheerful members of this Club are always more than welcome at headquarters, and particularly at a time when calamity howlers are unusually busy with unceasing efforts to broadcast hard times. We refer to a recent communication from Evans B. Davis, who, if he isn't already snowed in up in Dolgeville, N. Y., will be before this winter is over. He manages the Strand Theatre in that Adirondack foothill town.

He hasn't been up there very long, but long enough to become more or less a fixture in civic life. So, when the matter of an unemployment relief show came along the mayor simply unloaded the campaign on the Strand management. He put it up to Davis to get rid of tickets and saddled him with responsibility of money, etc.; in fact, everything in connection with the event. To insure coverage of the town, he divided it off in sections and enlisted aid from Boy Scouts and Girl Guides on a house-to-house canvass. The ministers announced the benefit from their pulpits and tickets were also sold from stores and theatre box office. The local newspaper and one in a neighboring city donated readers and ads, everybody worked hard and the show was a success from every angle.

Further proof of the high regard held for Davis by town officials is seen in a recent increase in hours for Sunday shows. Heretofore, but one 8:30 P. M. show was allowed, but after a tough fight against the town Blues, the theatre has been given a matinee show and one in the evening from 7:45 on, all of which is helping out at the box office during the winter season.

Good luck, Evans, and keep up the excellent work. Looks to us down this way that you have fitted in nicely with the job. We'd like to run up your way and get some rabbit shooting, and suppose you and the Mrs. would like to take another look at the lights down this way. But that's life.

WITH PUBLIX NOW!

E. M. McDaniel, for some time connected with Hall Industries Theatres in Texas and lately manager of the Hall Theatre in Kingsville, Tex., has joined Publix forces in Marshalltown, Iowa, where he is in charge of the Strand Theatre.

PRYTZ ADDS TO STAN' McNEIL'S SCHEME FOR GOOD WILL CANVASSER

A short time ago we published an interesting yarn from Stan McNeill, of the Capitol Theatre, Smith Falls, Ontario, Canada, in reference to a plan he had worked out concerning a "Goodwill Canvasser," in which a young woman was employed to canvass the town to secure reactions, data, etc., pertaining to motion pictures. Now, we have another supporter of this move in the person of Roy Prytz, manager of the Granada Theatre in Duluth, Minn., who has used a somewhat similar plan under the head of "Institutional Work."

Qualifications

Prytz also stresses the importance of paying especial attention to the type of woman employed for the work. She must be gifted with exceptional personality, possess ability to converse intimately on her subjects and be well acquainted with the art of canvassing. The young lady who did the work for him covered the city in a most systematic manner, gathering information on a card that was later made out in duplicate form. Layout of this card consisted of name, address, 'phone, date of birth, star preference (male, female), preference for western, comedy, mystery, comedy-drama, historical, favorite theatre and why, and suggestions for betterment. Also, as in McNeill's case, the girl plugged coming attractions.

Card System

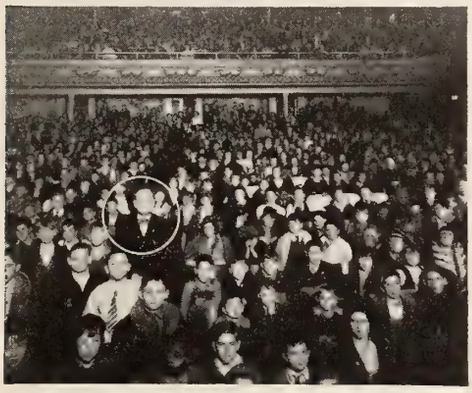
After filing the original card under "Birth Dates," a second card was made out and filed under "Star Preference Names." When the canvassing job was completed, Prytz had his cashier take over the file and attend to routine duties of mailing single passes to each resident on birthdays and making notification when favorite stars could be seen. If a certain star appeared in a coming attraction, she would take all cards from file on star, or team of stars, about four days in advance and make calls by telephone. The same procedure was used on outstanding westerns, historical pictures, etc. Although the majority of the cards bore the name of housewives, as a follow-up the institutional director worked evenings part time and made out cards for both man and wife.

Recent Tie-Up

We also note that Prytz recently made a good tie-up with a number of local merchants in connection with showings of a series of "Album of Stars." A score card was made out for each chapter, with same numbers on card that appeared on screen, and patrons were asked to exercise their memory by writing in the proper names. Valuable awards, ranging from living room suites and radios down to golf clubs, were promoted from the merchants for the most comprehensive reports. Lest the above is not quite clear, numbers, not names, appeared when the different photographs were screened.

Roy's slants on the canvassing job are interesting and we're sure that his suggestions will help round out the excellent plan already submitted by Stan McNeill. The former found that all cost involved in doing this work was repaid many times over through using the valuable material gathered for follow-up efforts, and we can well believe that this is true. Mack will also be interested to learn that his scheme has also been successfully used by another Club member. We would like to hear from other members if they see fit to try out the plan.

ANOTHER EYE-ARRESTING RIVOLI FRONT!



Ever since the Rivoli Theatre, New York City, began its practice of putting up eye-arresting displays for the edification of traffic along the Great White Way, searchers for something different in the way of fronts have been trained to gape at this house. The above photo shows both general scheme of front used for "Age to Love," and a close-up of the compo-board portion which contained enlarged stills, scene posters and cutouts. Ralph Stitt, long associated with the color contributed to Broadway by the Rivoli, also designed this display.

ROSENTHAL HOST TO MULTITUDE OF KIDS AND THE STUNT PAID

It's really not news when mention is made in these columns of Jake Rosenthal, manager of the Iowa Theatre, Waterloo, Iowa, for we've described the activities of this enterprising showman on many occasions; however, when several thousand kiddies crash his house to witness "Penrod and Sam" at his annual Hallowe'en party, then it's another proposition. Free pumpkins and an episode of an exciting serial helped make the invasion somewhat the nature of a stampede.

We don't know just how many seats there are in the Iowa, but from the accompanying photo it's easy to see that the house was jammed from orchestra to balcony. Three shows had to be held before this genial host could carry out his obligations to Waterloo's entire juvenile element, but the kids paid up by boosting the show to such an extent that practically every adult in town witnessed succeeding performances. That's Jake himself in the photo with the white line around head and shoulders.

Preceding the show, about 4,000 of the kids participated in a parade to the theatre, led by a band and squad of motorcycle police. Big shots of the city contributed their presence in de luxe autos and the Iowa's own Caliophone brought up the rear as a sop for any stragglers. All in all, it was a huge job, but you can bet that it made a big sensation throughout the city.

Kiddies and adults can be seen in the line-up shown in the other photo taken in front of the Iowa when the Siamese twins were booked in conjunction with "The Viking." What better time to invite more kids to see a free matinee, thought Jake, and results from four days' big business testified to his belief that youngsters are great word-of-mouth advertisers. More than 30 doctors and surgeons accepted an invitation to make an examination of the twins at a local hospital before the show opened and this stunt alsod materially aided the excellent returns at the box-office.

It's easy to believe that practically every youngster in Waterloo goes about telling the world what a great guy this Jake Rosenthal is and what a fine theatre he operates. And that's just as it should be. These instances are not by any means the first bids that this showman has made for kiddie goodwill, for he's always been their good friend. They repay him by being very good friends of his; which is another sock at the fellows who discount the value of kiddie attendance. Before we sign off, let us credit Virgil Lewis, able assistant executive at the Iowa, for his part in the activities described above and thank him for making it possible for headquarters to receive the information. We'll be looking for more.

BASSIN AND STAFF PROMOTED CORKING ANNIVERSARY PAPER

We'll have to take the hat off to Charley Bassin and his boys for their efforts in putting over a corking First Anniversary for the Oriental Theatre, Mattapan, Mass. Bassin is the managing director of this house and had supervision of the entire affair, but he gives plenty of credit for the able assistance given him by his youthful house manager, Phillip D. DePetro, and the entire staff.

And when we come to think it over, it's been some little time since we've seen a better looking eight-page newspaper supplement than was issued on the occasion of the Oriental's birthday. You may be further surprised to know that this entire stunt only cost the theatre $25, and this amount covered the cost of the theatre ad on page seven. The only other cuts not paid for by the newspaper were those of the cashiers, projectionists and service staff, who all chipped in for their share of this expense. All advertising by local merchants was solicited and obtained by Bassin and his staff, and this comfortably took care of publishing overhead. And when we say comfortably, we mean just that, for the issue was generously supported.

Both Charlie Bassin and his assistant DePetro have been attached to the Oriental since this house opened a year ago last October. Both have shown enterprise in the handling of the house and the matter of obtaining local good will, proof of which is before our eyes in the well-gotten up Anniversary issue of the local newspaper. We will look forward to hearing what was done at this theatre to pep up the holiday season. Until then, we'll sign off and wish the entire staff a lot of luck.

JACK STODEL SENDS CLUB SOME GAGS HE USED IN CAPE TOWN

From far-off Africa comes word of some recent activities of Jack Stodel, who, with his father, operates African Theatres Limited, a concern with headquarters at Johannesburg. Jack writes from Cape Town.

Tying up with the fact that "Big Pond" featured a scene in a big chewing gum factory, he tied up with a local wholesaler of this product for distribution of envelopes containing samples of gum. Two persons were dressed to represent Maurice Chevalier and Claudette Colbert in factory costume and the samples were handed out from a big limousine auto.

Another stunt that commanded a whole lot of attention when "Cohens & Kellys in Africa" was exploited was a wagon float made up with some forestry, real monkeys, a couple of stuffed lions and two persons representing the lead characters dressed in regular safari rig.

On account of the warm weather in Cape Town, much use is being made of the lobbies as a selling factor. These are gradually coming to look like ferneries, with rich green ferns of all descriptions hung along the walls and corner decorations of palms. Some of the managers are even trying to grow ivy and other creepers in their endeavor to manufacture a more refreshing atmosphere around the theatre.

All interesting, Jack, and we're sure that some managers in this country will seize upon your idea of enhancing the appearance of their lobbies with real ferns, etc. With regard to your dad, he did make a call at Club headquarters and we were very glad to see him. Tell us more about what you and your associates are doing to sell shows in your country for these activities are always interesting to your fellow showmen in the U. S. A.

LASSMAN WAGED BIG CAMPAIGN TO SELL "SIDEWALKS OF N. Y."

The streets of Troy, N. Y., are still being effectively used by Garry Lassman, manager of the Lincoln Theatre there, to exploit the wares he has for sale. Not so very long ago we informed you through this department that he put on a big parade as part of his campaign on "Side Show." You will note in the photo that he repeated this stunt when exploiting "Sidewalks of New York."

The band and marchers pictured here were promoted from a local school. Each youngster carried a banner advertising that they were on the way to see the picture and proximity to Albany, Al Smith's old home town, made his familiar battle song "East Side-West Side" a feature of the parade.

Other plugs consisted of a tie-up with a music dealer to give away 50 harmonicas at special matinee for children; the distribution of 5,000 heralds to school children; eleven special store windows featuring star stills, with star wearing or holding some article on display such as, Big Ben clock, Illinois wrist watch, sport jackets, Ford Roadster, shot gun, etc.; a hat tie-up with smart men's shop; puzzle gag in local newspaper two days in advance, and a bally of a hurdy-gurdy man playing "East Side-West Side." Still another gag used was the one with bridge of false teeth placed on easel in lobby with caption reading, "This bridge was laughed out during last night's performance. Owner can have same by applying to manager."

It's easy to see that Lassman hasn't lost any time getting acquainted in his newly-adopted city and we're glad to hear that he's doing so nicely.

BOOKS AS PREMIUMS!

Theatres looking for a new and different slant on the give-away premium idea might give a thought to the question of books. Only recently we came across a company which had a twelve-week plan in which a different book was handed out each week until the full set was distributed, including two attractive bookends.

Further investigation revealed that these books were very attractive and make a neat set for anybody's bookshelf. And the subjects were of general interest among the book-loving element and even among those who are not classed as book-worms.

Those sufficiently interested might drop us a line at Club headquarters and we'll tell you more about it and where they can be secured. The price is about the same as most other premiums, so don't let that angle scare you away from the idea.

In view of the fact that this plan only involves twelve weeks it may meet with favor among those showmen who prefer the short to the long idea.

FRUCHT INTRIGUED THEATRE FANS WITH GALLOPING DOMINOS

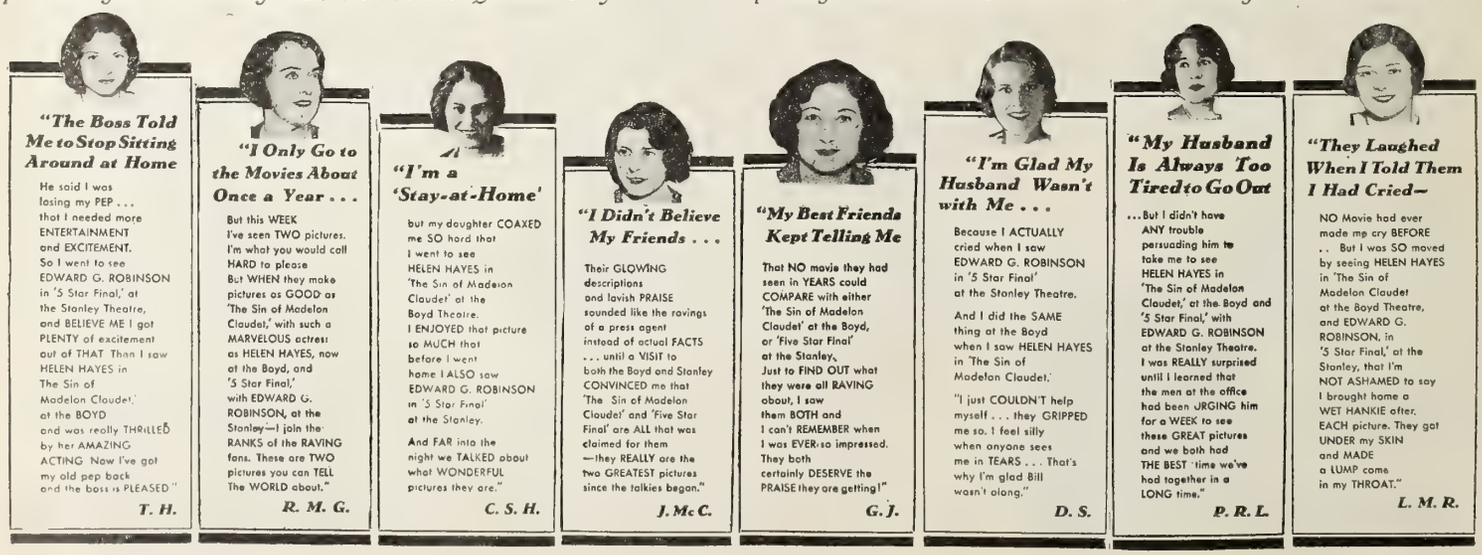
Gambling proclivities of the human race were taken into consideration when Lester "Dr. Brooks" Frucht, manager of the Tremont Theatre, New York City, cast about for an idea to exploit "The Big Gamble," and in no time at all this showman's fertile brain sprouted one that grew until it reached the cash register in his box-office.

It was all in a little envelope that contained two miniature dice with copy on outside reading, "Here's a chance to gamble. BUT—don't gamble on Missing" name of stars, title of picture, etc., followed). The "Doc" states it wasn't at all difficult to get the little envelopes into the hands of neighborhood skeptics, because they were getting something for nothing.

Of course, Doc gave away the customary live turkeys during Thanksgiving Week, but in order to add a little pep, fun and zowie to the festive event, he let the winners of the turks catch them after the birds were turned loose from the stage.

As the good Doctor states, something for nothing goes quite a long distance and we don't doubt for one moment that many of his cute little dice are being carried around in the vest pockets of good Bronx citizens. What a stroke of showmanship this would have been had the Tremont been located down in the Harlem black belt! With free dice and free turkeys, plus the art of catching the latter, some tricky artistry would have been in evidence.

There is a Santa Claus up in the Bronx, isn't there? Or has the past year been too tough for him? In any event, let the rest of the boys know what you did for Xmas.



ADVERTISING ON THE WOMAN'S PAGE

Julius Curley, advertising and publicity director for the Warner houses in Philadelphia, Pa., put over a remarkable departure from the usual advertising methods when he floated a series of ads like those illustrated below. All of the ads were spotted on the woman's page of the newspaper, which proved that the woman's page can be made a valuable asset in attracting the female attention for any picture so handled.

It was Curley's intention to attract notice from the women by something different and you can well judge for yourself how well he succeeded. All of the copy was written so that it sounded just like a woman would express herself. These little ads are credited with no small portion of the business these two pictures grossed during their run in the Quaker City.

Commenting on this campaign, "Carry On," the official house organ for Warner Theatres, said: "Incidentally, this campaign exemplifies an effort we are making, in all our advertising, to get away from the tendency toward stereotyped theatrical copy and the excessive use of superlatives . . . a practice which we believe often causes readers to discredit theatrical advertising in general or to pass it over lightly, without giving it the attention that it might receive if written with a truer ring of sincerity and originality."

Other showmen might find this type of advertising mighty profitable and sufficiently different to achieve the results obtained by Curley. Certainly, we must all agree that this enterprising showman has constructed a striking and distinctive ad.

"The Boss Told Me to Stop Sitting Around at Home

He said I was losing my PEP . . . that I needed more ENTERTAINMENT and EXCITEMENT. So I went to see EDWARD G. ROBINSON in '5 Star Final,' at the Stanley Theatre, and BELIEVE ME I got PLENTY of excitement out of THAT. Then I saw HELEN HAYES in The Sin of Madelon Claudet,' at the BOYD and was really THRILLED by her AMAZING ACTING. Now I've got my old pep back and the boss is PLEASED"

T. H.

"I Only Go to the Movies About Once a Year . . .

But this WEEK I've seen TWO pictures. I'm what you would call HARD to please But WHEN they make pictures as GOOD as 'The Sin of Madelon Claudet,' with such a MARVELOUS actress as HELEN HAYES, now at the Boyd, and '5 Star Final,' with EDWARD G. ROBINSON, at the Stanley—I join the RANKS of the RAVING fans. These are TWO pictures you can TELL The WORLD about."

R. M. G.

"I'm a 'Stay-at-Home'

but my daughter COAXED me SO hard that I went to see HELEN HAYES in 'The Sin of Madelon Claudet' at the Boyd Theatre. I ENJOYED that picture so MUCH that before I went home I ALSO saw EDWARD G. ROBINSON in '5 Star Final' at the Stanley.

And FAR into the night we TALKED about what WONDERFUL pictures they are."

C. S. H.

"I Didn't Believe My Friends . . .

Their GLOWING descriptions and lavish PRAISE sounded like the ravings of a press agent instead of actual FACTS . . . until a VISIT to both the Boyd and Stanley CONVINCED me that 'The Sin of Madelon Claudet' and 'Five Star Final' are ALL that was claimed for them —they REALLY are the two GREATEST pictures since the talkies began."

J. McC.

"My Best Friends Kept Telling Me

That NO movie they had seen in YEARS could COMPARE with either 'The Sin of Madelon Claudet' at the Boyd, or 'Five Star Final' at the Stanley. Just to FIND OUT what they were all RAVING about, I saw them BOTH and I can't REMEMBER when I was EVER so impressed. They both certainly DESERVE the PRAISE they are getting!"

G. J.

"I'm Glad My Husband Wasn't with Me . . .

Because I ACTUALLY cried when I saw EDWARD G. ROBINSON in '5 Star Final' at the Stanley Theatre.

And I did the SAME thing at the Boyd when I saw HELEN HAYES in 'The Sin of Madelon Claudet.'

"I just COULDN'T help myself . . . they GRIPPED me so. I feel silly when anyone sees me in TEARS . . . That's why I'm glad Bill wasn't along."

D. S.

"My Husband Is Always Too Tired to Go Out

. . . But I didn't have ANY trouble persuading him to take me to see HELEN HAYES in 'The Sin of Madelon Claudet,' at the Boyd and '5 Star Final,' with EDWARD G. ROBINSON at the Stanley Theatre. I was REALLY surprised until I learned that the men at the office had been URGING him for a WEEK to see these GREAT pictures and we both had THE BEST time we've had together in a LONG time."

P. R. L.

"They Laughed When I Told Them I Had Cried—

NO Movie had ever made me cry BEFORE . . But I was SO moved by seeing HELEN HAYES in 'The Sin of Madelon Claudet at the Boyd Theatre, and EDWARD G. ROBINSON, in '5 Star Final,' at the Stanley, that I'm NOT ASHAMED to say I brought home a WET HANKIE after. EACH picture. They got UNDER my SKIN and MADE a LUMP come in my THROAT."

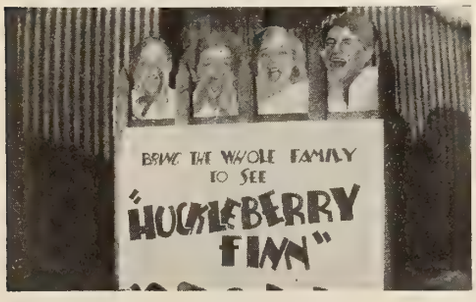
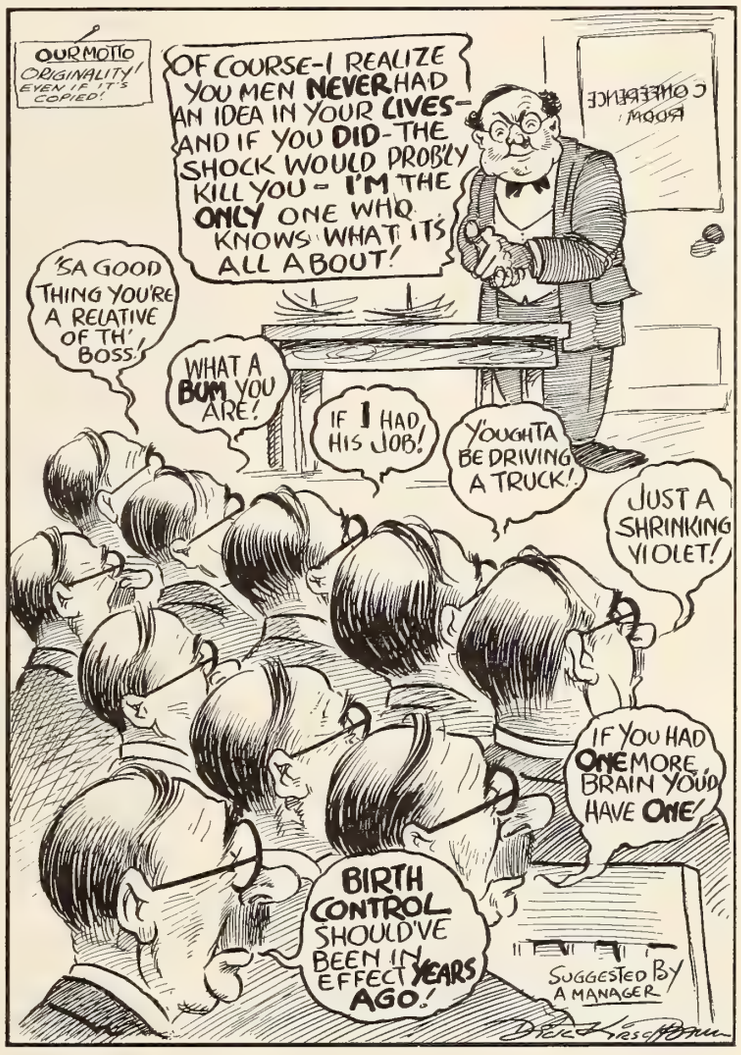
HAROLD LEE SOUNDS NOTE OF OPTIMISM FOR SHOW BUSINESS

With all the crying about hard times, it is a pleasure to record a note of optimism from Bath, N. Y., where H. C. Lee is smilingly managing the New Babcock Theatre. There's a new post-office building under construction in his town and a new jail is rapidly nearing completion. Both projects are the means of keeping a lot of people employed and therefore a source of revenue to local trade.



When the subject of an unemployment relief show at the theatre was brought up before the Chamber of Commerce, Lee had a most difficult time convincing this august body that a benefit show ought to be staged. Although the Chamber deemed the offer generous, it did not believe in crying about circumstances that, after all, were not too bad. However, in conjunction with the Elks Club, the show was pulled off and it cleared a goodly sum for the needy, if any.

Yes, there's always a ray of sunshine around the corner if you look for it. Some folk complain about having to play three pictures each week and Lee is getting fat on this policy. It works this way: when a picture is so not so hot it only has to be played one day, whereas there is not as much undesirable comment as a two-day stand would cause. The best pictures are played on a Sunday, Monday, Thursday and Friday. Yes, there's always something to be thankful for.



For advertising mediums he's still using the lobby, a weekly program, trailers and newspapers. He also has 18 outside three-sheet boards, but only uses these when plugging a stage attraction. Right now he's getting ready for the holiday trade and an Anniversary which comes along during Christmas Week. Last year he had bang-up business and, according to the line-up of pictures, he looks for better trade this season.

Lee has been at the Babcock for seven years this Xmas and he says tell the boys that show business hasn't all gone to hell, no matter what some fellows seem to think. Better times are coming and after the first of the year time goes fast, he states, and further qualifies his argument with the thought that a chap might be a lot worse off without any kind of a job.

Okay, Harold; we're with you heart and soul. But even if things do go bad up your way, there's always that nice new jail to fall back on. Sorry that we could not reproduce more of those snaps you sent along, but transportation raised the devil with them. Maybe you'll recognize yourself in the small photo, the time when you went out back of the house to do a bit of painting. The other shows a display made for "Huckleberry Finn."

LARMOUR MADE HIS OWN NOVELTY WHEN FILLING OPEN DATE

There are lots of firms manufacturing novelties for use in this business but if you don't happen to have any on hand and want something in a hurry, you might try a little gag used by M. W. Larmour, manager of the National Theatre, Graham, Tex., when he spot-booked "Dracula" for an open date.

Maybe a lot of you have already seen the card that's captioned "Health Test," on which is printed instructions to hold the card two inches from mouth, blow breath for 5 seconds or longer on an imprinted Red Spot. If the color changes you must see your doctor right away; if not, then you should see "Dracula," or what have you. The balance of space is devoted to theatre copy. Well, Larmour tells us he got 500 of these printed on a hurry-up order, distributed some on store counters, gave others to doctors and handed a few out to pedestrians, and that the gag found wide distribution all over town. People carried them around to show to their friends and many applied at the box office for duplicates.

That was fast work on Larmour's novelty and we don't doubt for a minute that had the time been at his disposal, he'd have tied up some local merchant for an ad on the reverse side to take care of printing cost. Even if one has to stand the entire amount, the expense of getting out this little gag will not be much and it's a good one to file away for an emergency, or to use whenever practical. Glad to hear from you again, M. W., and shoot along some more of your ideas just as soon as you can find the time to do so.

HICKS FOUND THAT HIS PATRONS WERE FOND OF DOUGHNUTS

That residents living in the community catered to by the Hampden Theatre, Baltimore, like doughnuts, was amply disclosed when Charles A. Hicks played "Palmy Days," writes Miss Elizabeth Baker, a Hicks associate at this theatre.

As the result of a tie-up made with a neighborhood bakery, it was arranged to have a booth in the lobby from which a girl, dressed a la picture costume, distributed fresh doughnuts. The stunt caused a lot of talk around the neighborhood and both bakery and theatre benefited by increased trade. Needless to state, the patrons liked the cakes.

It's just about lunch time as we're setting this down and, believe the writer, Miss Baker, your description of those nice fresh doughnuts is going to cut this little account short. But before we sign off, let us ask that you keep this department further informed on what you and Chas. A. are doing to put shows over at the Hampden.

ROBOT WAS GREAT PLUG FOR THEATRE, SAYS C. T. SPENCER

This is not by any means a press notice for a certain gentleman by the name of Frozo, whose photo appears along with this article; rather, it is the result of enthusiasm displayed by C. T. Spencer, manager of the Greater Capitol Theatre, Windsor, Ontaria, Canada, for a tie-up he made in connection with "Daughter of a Dragon."

A local auto leader was tied up for use of a car and for three days in advance Frozo did his stuff about town. He billed himself as "Is He Human or Robot?" and Spencer states that traffic was stopped whenever the stunt was pulled. He is sure that it materially aided the box-office during the showing of the picture.

Another stunt used in connection with the above picture was a tie-up made with a large Chinese cafe for the printing of 5,000 menu cards. These cards, furnished by the theatre, were attractively dressed with cuts of Anna May Wong and carried appropriately worded copy pertaining to the picture. Balance of the card was left blank for cafe to fill in menu.

Spencer also achieved success with the staging of a recent Fur Show through a tie-up with a branch of one of the largest retail fur distributors in Canada. $25,000 worth of choice furs were shipped from Toronto solely for the occasion and services of models which were obtained through a tie-up with a local charitable organization. The local fur store carried a large ad in the newspaper, giving generous mention to the theatre, and the only cost to house for the entire show was that of art panels, made by the theatre artist, a sort of trailer for the show and mention of it in regular run of advertising.

Regarding the robot we're just going to take Spencer's word for the fact that it achieved the desired attention, and if you are looking to stir up interest in the Chinese quarter his method of the supplying the menu cards can certainly be recommended as a corking medium. We like the way he handled the fur show for reason that by tying up with the local organizations the show lost the aspect of a paid attraction. Moreover, it was handled at the very smallest cost possible to any house. And how this costless selling does make a hit these days! Carry on, Spence, and let's hear from you often.

"NO WONDER HE'S DOING A BIG BUSINESS. HE PLAYS ALL THE HITS."

Yep, we've heard that remark numerous times ourselves.

"HE DOESN'T HAVE TO ADVERTISE. HE PLAYS TO STANDING ROOM EVERY DAY."

And we've heard that one too. Haven't we all?

So we decided to dig in a little deeper and find out if it's really true that a theatre playing all the best product does not have to advertise or exploit it's attractions.

Starting out with the leading lights of the industry; heads of circuit advertising and publicity departments; district and divisional publicity chiefs; and right on down to the man running the theatre; they will all express their views on this all-important subject in the forthcoming series on the Club pages under the heading of:

IS ADVERTISING AND EXPLOITATION NECESSARY?

Watch for the first of this interesting, instructive and enlightening series of showmanship slants from men who not only know what it's all about but can back up their ideas with many years of experience in this business of running theatres and selling shows.

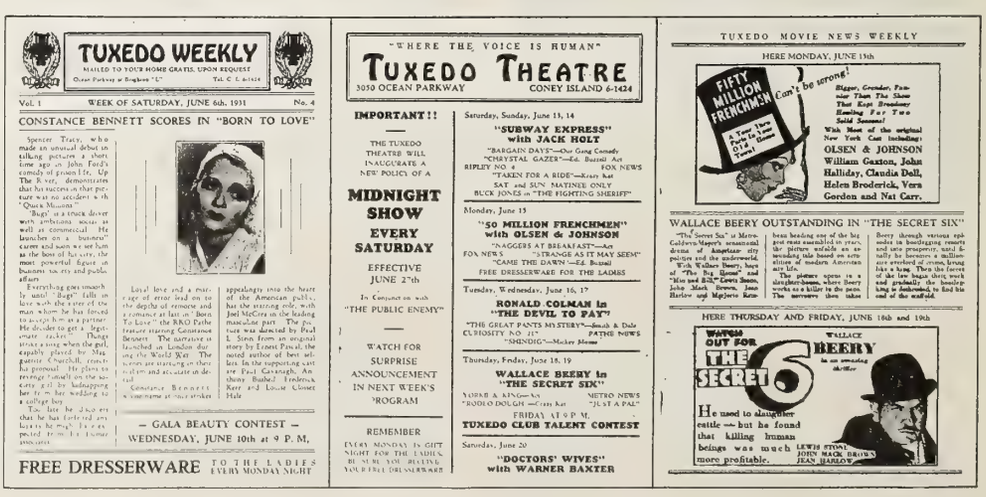
GOLDBERG PROMOTED THREE DOUBLE TRUCKS FOR BOSTON THEATRE

Double trucks advertising Paramount Anniversary Weeks were secured in three papers circulating in Boston suburban communities at no cost to the theatre a few weeks ago by Tom Wall, manager of the Modern Theatre. While we are giving Wall credit for the deal, a considerable portion of the work was done by Harry H. Goldberg, assistant manager of the house, and to whom we are indebted for putting us in line to receive the information.

There's no disputing the fact that the theatre copy dominated all three of the co-ops. Tom Wall's photo graces the upper left hand page and he is flanked by Mr. Zukor and Edward A. Zorn, the latter the district manager of Boston Paramount theatres. On the right hand page, Harry H. Goldberg is teamed up with Sam Katz, with Ralph Branton, division manager also getting a break. And we almost neglected to mention that M. J. Mullin, general manager of all Publix houses in New England, is credited with a generous amount of space on the opposite page. All the photos and copy are spread across the top portion of the page, the ads of the merchants appearing below.



Nice work Harry, for there's no doubt but that you put over a corking publicity stunt when you promoted three co-ops at one time. Keep this up and the next thing we know you'll be at the helm of your own house. More power to you and don't forget that we are going to depend upon you to keep the Club informed on what's going on in your end of Boston. Now that the holiday season is on, what are you doing?

SHOWMANSHIP VIA THE PROGRAM!

Once more the question of theatre programs comes to the centre of the stage; but they are also responsible for much discussion as to their value and costs. During the last year economy drives, slashed budgets or what have you, compelled many theatres to discontinue their regular mailing lists. Their argument was: figuring the cost of the printing, addressing of envelopes and the mailing costs, all mounted up to a figure that reached into big money where the house had a list of any great proportions.

Now, we are not going to enter into the argument because it stands to reason that the manager of a theatre ought to know whether the cost involved in a mailing list is worth while. But we do favor a program ror every house because it provides the theatre with a powerful wedge to get over something about their shows and their house through means other than trailers.

For the neighborhood theatre we offer the program of Al Greene out in the Brighton Beach section of Brooklyn, N. Y. You will note that he makes it newsy and readable by reason of the manner in which he arranges his layout. Each attraction on his current bill gets a good break through sensible type usage and at the same time his shorts are not lost in the shuffle.

BURROW CASHED IN BY PROMOTING PAGE AD ON "PALMY DAYS"

Another good example of how the picture "Palmy Days" was used to promote a co-op ad among business men is seen in a Lancaster, Pa., newspaper, which also gives generous mention to the Lansdale Theatre, a house managed by E. F. Burrow.

That a great many merchants fell in line to make up this full page is quite evident from the layout we have before us, and a box on the front page of the paper gave prominent space to the tie-up. The Burgess of the city, who corresponds to Mayor, was elected a chief-dunker and attention was called to the fact that all Lansdale shoppers were invited to become members of the National Dunkers Association." A local doughnut manufacturer contributed 3,000 doughnuts for free distribution in the theatre lobby and employees of the firm and their wives were guests of the theatre on this occasion.

The title of the above picture has particularly lent itself to the promotion of "better times" ads, according to our observations, if only on account of the significance of the words that go to make it up. We are glad to hear that Burrow was successful with his campaign and hope that he will continue to keep this Club posted on what's going on in his town.

HAMILTON'S MOTHER HUBBARD SHOW AIDED CUPBOARDS OF NEEDY

The last time we reported on the show-selling activities of B. B. Hamilton, manager of the Palace Theatre in Norwich, Conn., we mentioned among other things that he had recently attained the limelight for himself and theatre through circulation of a rumor that there was a lot of scandal at the Palace concerning a Mr. Hamilton. It materialized that it was Aleck, not B. B., who was cause of the scandal.

The latest stunt engineered by this enterprising showman was a "Mother Hubbard" matinee to help fill the cupboards of the poor and needy on Thanksgiving Day. Old Mother Hubbard herself appeared at the theatre on a Saturday morning and welcomed approximately 1,500 children, each of whom brought along some article of food. The photo on this page shows a portion of the canned goods donated by the youngsters, for which they were allowed to see the morning show. All articles of food were turned over to the welfare committee of the local lodge of Elks. The newspaper gave the event a two-column story.

Well, B. B., we see that you are still at the old game of gaining good will and publicity for your house and we'll say that 1,500 cans of food is not an item to be laughed off by anybody. We're glad to hear that everything is going along all right in the old town and will hope to get up there some day. In the meantime, keep your head up and continue to slam the old ball along.

POSTER ART WORK!

DRAWN BY HERB SIMPSON

High-light poster art has one decided advantage; it results in a far more attractive display than any other form of theatrical art work. At least we have the word of some reputable sign men for that statement. But even if they didn't express themselves you would just need a hasty glance to convince you that it was true.

Look at this poster from Herb Simpson of Evansville, Ind. Note how fine the resemblance is to Arlen in the flesh and Arlen on the poster. Like all high-light posters, this one should be placed some distance away from the eye to get the best idea of what it will look like in finished form.

We hope that this series continues to be of interest and value. Several other art men have come through with posters to help Benton James and Herb Simpson carry on the good work.

Those contributing must keep in mind that only originals or sharp photographic reproductions can be made into cuts for these pages and still retain their value for others to use. Don't send colored posters or foggy snapshots. They are a waste of your time and money and we can't possibly use them.

HOST TO ALLIED!

Jake Rosenthal, well known manager of the Iowa Theatre in Waterloo, Iowa, recently acted as host to members of the Allied Theatre Owners of Iowa at a convention held at a local hotel. Among those present were, C. L. Niles, of Anamosa, president of the organization; E. O. Ellsworth, of Iowa Falls, vice president, and Lester F. Martin, Nevada, secretary-treasurer. Approximately 50 members were present.

STANFIELD GAVE HIS TOWN FIRST CLOSEUP OF REAL MOVIE HERO

It takes hard work to work up theatre patronage in the Western Short Grass Country, out where C. C. "Cliff" Stanfield owns and manages the Rex Theatre, but he and his staff go after it and they get it.

For instance, not long ago Cliff gave Elk City, Okla., its first glimpse of a real, live movie hero. The fact that the stunt was a complete innovation may account, he states, for the appearance of the Sheriff, City Marshal and Deputies and most of the youngsters at the railroad station when Bill Cody arrived to make a personal appearance in connection with the showings of "Oklahoma Jim." All these celebrities, including a horde of children, then got together and paraded to the front of the theatre, where Cody was presented with "keys to the city" by no less a personage than the Mayor himself. The cost to theatre amounted to a few passes to the Boy Scouts.

Other stunts that have helped Stanfield put over his house included a party for all school teachers immediately after school opening, thus furthering a most remunerative friendship; a tie-up with Rotary Club and newspaper for a benefit matinee, whereby a ton of groceries was collected for the needy, and the personal solicitation for business in all adjoining towns. Regarding the latter, schools were especially plugged with reports when pictures such as "Abraham Lincoln," etc., were due and sometimes these efforts were rewarded by attendance of a large party or the whole school enrollment.

That-a-boy Cliff; keep the old ball rolling along. If you can sell all your town officials the idea of greeting Bill Cody, we wonder how they will react when a good looking female star visits your town. Your other ideas, to our way of thinking, also are in line with smart showmanship. Keep in touch with your Club.

Don't became impatient if your framed Membership Certificate is slow in reaching you. It takes between two and three weeks after receipt of application to prepare and ship these certificates.

First—They must be properly and carefully lettered.

Second—They must be signed.

Third—Then they are sent to be framed.

Fourth—Packed, labeled and shipped.

Fifth—Time necessary in transit.

In addition to the above we found ourselves swamped with new members' applications and are just beginning to catch up with them. So bear with us and allow reasonable time after you join for your certificate to reach your office.

Keeping Up With The Times!

WALTER MORRIS PUT OVER BIG CAMPAIGN ON NEWSPAPER OPUS

During his temporary assignment as manager of the Maryland Theatre in Hagerstown, M. D., following a readjustment of administrative policy in his division, Walter Morris quickly adapted himself to his new surroundings and among other activities put over a rousing campaign on "Five Star Final."

Three weeks in advance of showing a large shadow box, containing a large head of Robinson, feature title and playdates, was placed in the foyer, lighted with concealed blue lights. Flush with ceiling, another shadow box was constructed to run across entire width of lobby. This box was lighted with concealed amber lights and contained a small head of Robinson with with feature and cast titles of cut-out letters. A one-sheet card of black, with large reproductions of press comment, reviews and endorsements, was placed on an easel in the inner lobby two weeks in advance. This card was moved to a front frame during run.

In addition to showing front of lobby designed for the occasion, note from accompanying photo that a 24-sheet, reinforced with heavy papers, was hung on the building front above the theatre entrance. This was lighted with two 1,000-watt spotlights from the opposite side of the street. The front proper was made of compo board and covered with front pages of the various tabloid newspapers, with large cut-out letters of title on each side. Breaking through the newspaper background were large head cuts of Robinson, Marsh, Warner and Frances Starr. Stills in compo frames also lent to the general attractiveness of the front.

The "Inquiring Reporter" gag was also used to excellent results as part of the immediate campaign. People were asked for opinions on Robinson and picture, and these, along with snapshots of person, were published in both morning and evening editions of a local newspaper. The people were chosen at random on streets.

Five days before opening the city and surrounding rural communities were completely covered with window cards and one-sheets and six large banners were placed on the six highways leading into the city. Stickers were also placed on all outgoing theatre mail two weeks in advance, and on all tabloid newspapers sold at the leading news agency. Two thousand regular tab heralds were distributed with regular morning papers and passed out to Saturday morning shoppers along the main street. In addition to some outstanding newspaper ads, small teasers with typical tax copy were run in both morning and afternoon papers five days in advance. The papers also carried a generous assortment of readers and reviews.

By the time this appears in print Morris will in all probability be actively engaged out in C. J. Latta's Ohio division for Warner theatres, for he was recently called to New York for reassignment. We and all his fellow Club members wish him luck with whatever job he tackles and hope that he will continue to let his fellow showmen know what's going on show-business. Lest we forget, the other small photo on this page represents some Thanksgiving atmosphere provided for the Maryland lobby over this holiday. Clusters of corn stalks were placed along both sides of approach.

HARRY STEARN MADE BIG MERCHANT DEAL FOR HALLOWE'EN

A tie-up with the merchants in his town for a Hallowe'en party was the occasion for a flood of congratulatory comment from both merchants and patrons to Harry D. Stearn, manager of the American Theatre in Pittston, Pa. He had some competition in the form of a Mummers Parade put on by the American Legion but this came to a close shortly before nine o'clock in the evening, just about the time people began to flock into the theatre.

The merchants had tied-up with both theatre and Legion but Stearn started his activities a day in advance and as a consequence got the best break on the give-aways, which ranged from a pair of silk stockings to a radio. The many who vied for the honors were arrayed in costumes to imitate a number of screen comedians and other well known characters. Applause from the audience decided the winners. There were also give-aways for those who did outstanding song, dance and specialty acts. The total value of the gifts totaled $600 and not one cent of expense was borne by the theatre.

Stearn knows how to put over affairs of this kind, as has been evidenced in preceding reports of his activities. Keep it up, Harry, and don't forget to let your fellow showmen in on your good work.

FUN CLUB

Fred Ford, manager of the Saenger Theatre, Shreveport, La., has been very successful in organizing a "Fun Club" which had its first meeting on November 14, at which time 300 children were in attendance. A Big Sister is in charge of the club and its activities include the performance of talented children and the telling of stories by the Big Sister.

The Fun Club officers were introduced, and candy which had been promoted from a local confectionery store, was given to the young club members. This Fun Club is tied in with the local schools by awarding free admission to the first twenty children who rate 100% in spelling. The school authorities have been very lavish in their praise of this arrangement as it serves as an incentive to the children to apply themselves more seriously to their spelling.

The activities of the club are also broadcast over the local radio station and is building up to quite an entertaining feature.

TOM CLEARY SOLD CANTOR FILM BIG IN MONTREAL, CAN.

It is quite easy to agree with C. E. Duffey that the "Palmy Days" campaign recently waged by Thomas Cleary, manager of the Princess Theatre in Montreal, Canada, was a most comprehensive one in every respect, all attested to by returns at the box office.

The small truck shown in the accompanying photo was used to transport 700 loaves of bread and two young ladies, who effected distribution, but the bakery was tied-up for a total of 150 trucks. Each one carried a large banner of Cantor on both sides and the vehicles circulated through the entire city. 500 window streamers, advertising Wonder bread and "Palmy Days," were also placed at advantageous points.

Still another tie-up was made with Thrift stores for the placing of 50 five-foot banners and joint advertising in the newspapers. The ad featured a picture of Cantor with the admonition, "Buy Now, says Cantor and enjoy Palmy Days." A Buy Now Week was the slogan. Other stunts included the distribtuion of 2,000 cakes by young ladies in the lobby of the theatre; the playing of "Palmy Days" music by all orchestras in hotels and cabarets and window tie-ups with all music stores on sheet music.

The large photo shows how the front of the Princess was dressed for showing of "Miracle Woman." We are reproducing it for the reason that it was awarded a prize for being the outstanding front in the city.

So, Thomas Cleary is winning prizes for eye-striking theatre fronts these days. That's not surprising to us back here in Club headquarters, for we've been following the work of this enterprising showman for some little time. His work is always interesting and we're always glad to get a note from Duffey enclosing some examples of recent showmanship.

Montreal has Xmas celebrations that are worth writing about, according to what we've heard about this famous city, and so we'll expect to receive a mighty interesting story about what happened at the Princess Theatre over the holidays.

ON NEWSPAPER CONTACT!

Editor's Note: From "Carry On," the Warner House Organ, we reprint the following article on newspaper contacts. We are interested in two angles of this story. First: because it involves an important subject; second: because Frank Boucher, Regional Chairman of the Round Table Club, was responsible for it. We suggest that you not only read it through carefully, but digest the many fine points brought out and touching upon the tremendous value of friendly relations with the local papers.

. . . In managing a theatre there must be many rules of conduct which should be followed if one is to achieve success. There is one rule, however, which should be placed in the MUST column and religiously adhered to by every manager. That rule is . . . Contact your newspaper . . . maintain pleasant relationship with the editor . . . it will pay both of you.

One of the first things that Frank Boucher, newly appointed district manager for the Virginia Theatres of the Washington Zone did in his new post was to call his managers together and lay plans for making the newspapers in each of their towns "theatre-minded," that is to say, to make them stand up and take notice of anything that happened around the theatres. After the preliminary talk, Boucher visited each of his towns and with the manager made a personal call on each newspaper publisher, talked over the theatre problems, made suggestions as to improvement of conditions existing between the theatre and newspaper and created a great deal of favorable goodwill.

As a result of this concentrated campaign on the newspapers, Boucher reports that many unfavorable conditions have been corrected. He cites one as an example. Daily this particular newspaper ran editorials attacking the theatre, its prices, the pictures that were shown and advertising in pictures. Boucher and the manager called on this publisher, first, and after a few hours' conversation swung the man over to their side of the fence. That paper now runs more constructive articles praising the picture industry than any of the others.

Bill Oriani, manager of the Staunton, Virginia theatres, submits a group of tear sheets which include stories of new season product, three column cuts on his current attractions, free fashion show ads, newsreel ads, picture reviews, special stories and contests all clipped from the morning and evening papers which until the time that he went to Staunton would not give the theatres any free space and were very antagonistic toward the theatres in their editorial columns.

Maurice Blouin, manager of the Masonic Theatre, Clifton Forge, sends in tear sheets of front page stories on new season product, picture reviews of current attractions, two and three column cuts and special stories from papers in towns in which there are opposition theatres.

New season product stories, large free ads for classified tie-ups, reviews and stories on special attractions are included in the tear sheets sent in by Ashton Rudd of the Liberty Theatre, Bedford, Va.

Charles H. McKinney, manager of the Virginia Theatre, Harrisonburg, Va., matches the other managers with his tear sheets which contain special stories, new season product stories, reviews and publicity cuts.

During the last few weeks many stories on the new season's product, special shows, midnight shows, editorials on pictures, changes in policy and other news items have been used in every paper in the district where before they would have turned down the majority of the submitted material.

"Personal contact and friendly attitude is what gets the stories in the papers," says Boucher, "and give the paper a break whenever you can. Don't expect the impossible of them."

MAKE IT A SUGGESTION— NOT AN IMPERATIVE ORDER!

"Tact" and "Diplomacy" are the two ingredients used with great success by C. R. McCown, publicity and advertising director of the Crescent Amusement Co. of Nashville, Tenn., in his contacts with the house managers.

Using a mimeographed "pep" magazine issued periodically, he enthuses the manager over the coming product and the way it can be best sold according to the various spots under his supervision.

Unlike most circuit men, he carefully refrains from telling them what they must do. On the contrary, he stresses their own showmanship and encourages the manager to work out his exploitation and advertising to suit local conditions.

His little house organ is a model of its kind and far more valuable than some of the more imposing looking affairs turned out by some men who do not know what it means to run a theatre in an average small town. But they try to tell the small town manager how he ought to run his theatre and sell his attractions. A combination that can't win.

We wish to congratulate McCown on the fine work he is doing down in Tennessee and especially for the spicy, intelligent "Hi-Lights."

BRENNAN EMPLOYED UNIQUE BALLY FOR "THE ROAD TO RENO"

When "Road to Reno" was played by E. R. Brennan, manager of Lloyd's Theatre, Rhinelander, Wis., he arranged a unique ballyhoo that attracted an unusual amount of attention.

The accompanying photo will convey a good idea of the costumes worn by those who took part in the bally. The outfit used by the young man dressed up as a minister was the 45-year-old wedding suit of a prominent local man. You will also note that the dress worn by the lady is another heirloom. The boy was togged out in cutaway coat and conventional grey striped trousers.

The pseudo-minister led the parade, followed by the bride and groom. Each carried signs over their heads reading, "Reno Bound to Lloyd's Theatre to See The Road to Reno." In their wake was a parade of youngsters carrying 22 x 28 cards with face cutouts, title, etc. The circular advertising piece in photo was fashioned to represent a wedding ring (gold for the ring proper and black for the center where the title appeared). During the parade the entire gang attended two football games in progress at the time and succeeded in circulating the message before a large number of people.

Brennan tells us that the above stunt helped pack the house for the Saturday midnight show, Sunday matinee and evening and so we're passing it along to the rest of the gang to try out if they happen to be looking for something in the way of a bally for this picture, or one with a similar theme. Thanks to him for his contribution and we'll be looking forward to receiving others.

RECIPE FOR A HAPPY NEW YEAR

Take twelve fine, full-grown months; make certain they are free from all memories of envy, bitterness, hate and jealousy; cleanse from them every clinging spite; pick off all bits of pettiness and littleness; in short, see that these months are freed from the past—have them as fresh and clean as when they first came from the storehouse of Time.

Cut these months into thirty or thirty-one equal parts. This batch will keep for just one year. Do not attempt to make up the whole batch at one time (so many persons spoil the entire lot in this way), but prepare one day at one time, as follows:

Into each day put twelve parts of faith, eleven parts of patience, ten of courage, nine of work (some people omit this ingredient and so spoil the flavor of the rest), eight of hope, seven of fidelity, six of liberality, five of kindness, four of rest (leaving this out is like leaving the oil out of a salad—and don't do it) three of prayer, two of meditation and one well selected resolution. If you have no conscientious scruples, put in a teaspoonful of good spirits, a dash of fun, a pinch of folly, a sprinkling of play, and a heaping cupful of good humor.

Pour into the whole love, ad libitum and mix with a vim. Cook thoroughly in a fervent heat; garnish with a few smiles and a sprig of joy; then serve with quietness, unselfishness and a Happy New Year is a certainty.

O'DONNELL STRESSED FURS WHEN HOLDING FALL FASHION SHOW

Fur coats and neck pieces were stressed in a Fall Fashion Show recently held by C. E. O'Donnell, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Baton Rouge, La., in conjunction with showings of "Devotion" and this stunt turned out to be the highlight of the week's activities at this house.

A special ad on the style fur show together with mention of theatre, picture and playdates was a full-page flash. This full-page ad appeared in advance and was paid for by one of the local department stores that sponsored the show.

Luxurious fur coats were displayed in the lobby three days in advance and a window containing many types of fur coats together with stills from the picture was had with the department store.

The full-page ad appeared in the State Times, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday and in the Advocate on Tuesday and Wednesday. Ten sorority girls modeled the fur coats, evening gowns, neck pieces, etc. To add interest to the fur show, a comedy act was put on, a dance number by pupils of a local dancing instructor and a musical number by members of the Louisiana State University band.

Just another instance where still another Club member cashed in on putting over one of these popular attractions, this time emphasizing fur dresses, etc. It's not too late for others to line up their shows and we'd like to hear how the box office fares when these are pulled off.

TOM WALL AND HIS CREW OBTAINED AID OF CORPS AND BAND

Manager Tom Wall, of the Modern Theatre, Boston, Mass., and his crew consisting of assistant manager Harry Goldberg, doorman and ushers, have been active as usual with the business of selling shows.

Lately, in connection with a double feature program which included "Mad Parade," the Bessie Edwards Cadets and the Angel Guardian Band were invited to be guests of the occasion. More than 150 cadets, escorted by the band, participated in a parade of 45 minutes duration, finally ending up in front of the theatre. The entire group was seated in a reserved section and at the end of the running attraction, Tom Wall made a short speech during the light-up. Following applause of a wartime medley played by the band, the lights were gradually brought down and the screen was flooded with a blue light. The titles were flashed on in flaming red and the opening music of the "Mad Parade" was gradually brought from 7 points on the fader to 12. This was kept up until the air sequences closed.

Another stunt recently used by the Modern to exploit "Monkey Business" was an outside bally of an "Upsidedown Man." Construction of this bally has been explained a number of times in this department, but if anyone missed it and wants further information, we'll gladly furnish it.

The accompanying photo shows the cadet band drawing up in front of the theatre and from accounts in local newspapers the stunt was most favorably received and also resulted in additional publicity for the house. Tom Wall can be considered fortunate in having such an able corps of assistants. Goldberg handled publicity; Doorman Smith promoted the band; ushers carried 20 x 5 foot banners, and Tom himself enlisted the services of the cadets.

Flatfeet had time off recently when a Police Chief and a detachment of his men were invited by Julian Campbell, manager of the Strand Theatre, Long Branch, N. J., to witness a special showing of "Homicide Squad."

A HUCKNALL GAG!

In a recent issue of a Stockton, Calif., paper appeared a story to the effect that John W. Hucknall, manager of the National Theatre in that city, had been awakened at 4 A.M. by the persistent ringing of the telephone bell. Answering the 'phone and assuring the caller that it was indeed the National's manager talking, a female voice emphatically stated: "I saw your 'Frankenstein' picture yesterday and now I can't sleep. I'm going to see that you don't get any sleep either."

John generously offers this gag to all his friends and brother Round Tablers but cautions against using it too early in the run, as most managers need all the sleep they can get.

BEVEL BUILT VERY ATTRACTIVE FRONT WITH BALES OF HAY

All kinds of things have been used to fashion fronts for "Trader Horn," according to our observations, but as far as we know it remained for L. W. Bevel, manager of the Princess Theatre, Harriman, Tenn., to make one out of hay.

The photo he sent along may not show up so very well but you'll be able to get an idea of how the finished job looked. At the cost of $2.36 he bought 2 bales of hay, which was the entire cost of the display. You will not be able to discern the animals in the hay-jungle effect, but they're there just the same. In the center is a zebra and on either side two crocodiles. Lower down on each side appear the heads of lions. These were made in cut-out form and painted in natural colors. The large title letters across front were made from old beaver board. In addition to this, a bally worked surrounding towns and advance circulars were sent out.

That certainly was getting away with an attractive front at small cost, Bevel, and all we regret is that the photo wasn't large enough to present more detail. But we can see from the original that it made a mighty good appearance and those who have yet to play this picture ought to be able to profit on your Hay idea for a cheap and good looking front. We've noted your P. S. about the poster work and hope to receive this very soon.

RETURN TO CENTURY!

Two former Century Circuit men, after trying it out in the home office for a while, have gone back to the business of selling shows.

Sidney Seckler, former booker of short features, has been appointed manager of the Rialto Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., while Manny Friedman, lately connected with the publicity department, has been placed in charge of the Fantasy Theatre in Rockville Center, L. I., N. Y.

BILL ADAMS PLAYED UP NEW STYLE HAIR COLOR TO SELL FILM

Serialization of story, a style show, an identification stunt, merchandising tie-ups and regular run of theatre advertising, all combined to put over a corking campaign on "Platinum Blonde" for William W. Adams, manager of the Colonial Theatre in Brockton, Mass. His plan of campaign, as we look it over, appears to be one that can be followed to excellent results by many other Round Tablers.

Regarding the serialization, this was run in the leading local newspaper for six consecutive days, along with a two-column cut and a credit heading. On the last day of the story and directly following the end, there appeared a single-column ad headed, "Everybody's Talking About Platinum Blonde" (cast, theatre and playdate followed).

The newspaper was also tied up for the identification of two platinum blondes who were turned loose in the business district at a stated time on a certain day. The captors were instructed to bring the blondes to the newspaper office and receive a reward of $5 for each one. This stunt provided considerable excitement and was good for a deep three-column cut, head and caption, and also two other good sized stories. Note the photo showing both blondes and captors.

Public interest in platinum blondes was attested to during the holding of a fashion show in a window of one of the foremost gown shops in town the Friday before opening. Two of these blondes were used to display different model gowns and interest ran so high that reserve police had to be sent from the station to help keep traffic on the move. The other photo shows girls and cut-out in window.

Other efforts included the handing out of heralds by the two blondes who were stationed in the lobby three days before opening (the heralds were tied in with a guest ticket gag); a tie-up with the Victor radio dealer, with demonstration of machines by one of the blondes Saturday afternoon and evening (the dealer ran co-op ad on stunt); tie-up with auto dealer for new car and chauffeur to drive blondes about town, and regular ad campaign consisting of attractive newspaper ads, plus one, two and three sheets in surrounding towns and special banners and valances in lobby and on marquee, in addition to regular cut-outs.

Readers will note that the two platinum blondes were plugged in this campaign and there can be no doubt that this stunt offers many possibilities in the way of tie-ups with both newspapers and merchants. Some of our members may not be able to locate these new kind of blondes, but the fad appears to be spreading all over the country, so it will not be long before they'll be common as the old peroxide type. So cheer up if you already haven't a couple of these around right this minute. We appreciate this campaign information from Bill Adams and hope he will continue the good work.

CARUSO WITH SKOURAS!

Major Adolfo Caruso, late of the U. S. Theatre, Hoboken, N. J., has been appointed manager of the Granada Theatre, a Skouras house in Corona, L. I., N. Y., succeeding Walter Melvine, who has returned to his old position as manager of the Valentine Theatre, Bronx, New York City. The Major, while a newcomer to this field of showbusiness, did well with management of the U. S. and his new connection may be considered another step up the ladder.

HEADING FOR A REPUTATION!

JOSEPH P. SCHNITZEN is in charge of the York Theatre in York, Nebraska, where H. W. Cochran also a Round Table member, holds forth as City Manager of the York, New Sun and Dean Theatres. We are mighty glad to include Schnitzen's name on the roster of this organization and hope that he will do his share to keep the ball rolling along. Regarding his inquiry as to stunts, etc., in vogue with independent operators, we're going to ask him to be a little more specific, or just comb through each issue of this department, which from week to week carries a wide variety of show-selling methods.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WILLIAM E. KEATING is located in Minneapolis, Minn., where he manages the Loring Theatre, a link in the Publix circuit. He is another new member in line for introduction to his host of fellow showmen in this Club and soon we'll be hearing what Bill is doing for show-business in his city. If he will take time off to shoot along some ideas, we'll see that his brother managers are tipped off.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

G. A. NOTOPOULOS hails from Huntington, Pa., where he manages the Grand Theatre for Altoona-Publix Theatre of Altoona, Pa. A. C. Himmelein general-manages this outfit and has sponsored the membership of this new addition to the Club's list of showmen; hence, we'll expect to be in line for some more live-wire ideas to pass along to the rest of the gang.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

PAUL E. RYMAN manages the New Royal Theatre out in Tipton, Kansas, and while we haven't much information on hand at present to impart about this new Round Tabler we will anticipate a communication from him in the near future which will give us some additional dope on his activities in show-business.

EDWIN RUSSELL is at the helm of Bill Smalley's Theatre up in Johnstown, N. Y., which is a smart little city located at one of the gateways to the Adirondacks (see Socony map). We think that this is the same Ed Russell we knew when we called at this theatre several years ago and we're mighty glad to give him the glad hand. Business has been mighty good up his way all through this so-called depression, so we hear, and therefore we'l expect to hear a real note of optimism from this neck of our woods. If we have the price of gas next summer, Ed, we'll see you when we make our usual trip north. In the meantime, keep in touch with the club.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ROBERT I. TAYLOR is the manager of the Yale Theatre in Okmulgee, Okla, and another recent showman to sign up as a member of this Club. We've had occasion to mention the Yale Theatre before, and we feel sure that Taylor and his able assistant, Seymour, will do their share to keep this department moving along at its usual pace.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

G. D. SEYMOUR, whom we have already mentioned as associated with Robert I. Taylor, in the management of the Yale Theatre, has also signed on the dotted line provided on Club membership applications. Seymour takes care of advertising and right now we are privileged to look over a bally he arranged to exploit a recent picture. We'll tell you about this elsewhere in this department. Now that the Club has two live representatives in Okmulgee, Okla., we will expect to be kept informed on what's going on in show-business in that town.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

EARLE V. PATTON hails from the Bronx, New York City, where he has the job of managing the Crotona Theatre. Managers up in his section of the big city have not forgotten that there are ways and means of bringing in patrons to their shows, as some have in other neighborhoods, and we'll therefore anticipate some interesting communications from this new Club member. Limber up that writing arm, Pat, and let's know what's doing in the Bronx.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

EMANUEL FRIEDMAN is the new manager of the Fantasy Theatre, an A. H. Schwartz house in Rockville Centre, Long Island, New York. He was formerly located in the home office of the Schwartz circuit, but he's a dyed-in-the-wool showman, and once a theatreman, always a theatreman. So we now find him back on the firing line, all set to ring up some record grosses for his boss. He's located in a fine residential city and has a theatre anyone would be proud to manage. We'll be waiting to hear what he has done to start the ball a-rolling.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

H. S. "HERB" McGINNIS states that he's been a regular doggone parasite, reading and benefiting from all the fine suggestions sent in by supporters of this Club; that he's ashamed of himself for staying out so long and that he's going to make it all up by sending in some of his own show-selling stunts. That's the proper spirit, Herb, and we don't hold it against you one bit. They all see "the light" in time, and it's better late than never. We'll use that resume you enclosed in a future issue and will expect to hear a lot more from you, now that you're one of us.

EDWARD MILLER has charge of the Roosevelt Theatre, a Shea-Publix house up in Buffalo, N. Y. We are also glad to record that he, too, has enrolled in this Showman's Club and hope he'll help keep up the good standard set by his many fellow-managers. How is show-business up your way, Mi er? Tell us something about what you are doing to put your house over the top.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

C. E. CRABTREE is another Floric an to join this army of showmen and he hails from Avon Park, Fla., where he manages the Avalon Theatre. We will be glad to receive any contributions to this department that he may offer and will see that his brother showmen are tipped off to what is going on down in his section of the country. So shoot along some ideas, Crabtree, for that is the big idea behind this whole fraternal organization.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WILLIAM E. COX is another Publix manager to sign up as a contributor to these pages and all he's got to do now is to start the ball rolling with a contribution of some ideas that will help members over a tough spot. Bill has charge of the Paramount Theatre in Casa Grande, Arizona, and operates on a straight picture policy. Now that he's one of us he will have an opportunity to keep in close touch with the many Publix men who are members of this Club.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

EDWARD R. GOLDEN manages the New Olympic Theatre in Pittsburgh, Pa., and he is also in line for introduction to his brother managers in the Round Table Club. We are glad to include this new member's name on the Club roster and hope that he will contribute his share of the worthwhile show-selling stunts that appear in this department every week. There are many members of this organization in your city, Ed and when you run across them, please pass along our best regards. In the meantime, keep in touch with headquarters.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JEAN WILDENSTEIN is a new addition to Round Table ranks from San Antonio, Texas, where he manages the Auditorium Theatre. We are glad to welcome him to this ever-increasing group of showmen and if he sets the same pace that other San Antonians have in the matter of sending in worthwhile show-tips to this department, we can justly assert that all of us will be the better off for his recent affiliation. Let the Club hear from you, Jean.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

VOLNEY HAMM sends his application for membership in the Round Table from Grandfield, Okla., where he owns and manages the Ritz Theatre. His state is fast becoming a veritable bee-hive of active Clubmen and with his addition to its ranks, this organization will be in even a better position to get acquainted with how his shows are sold out in that section of this country. Come through, Volney, with some of your ideas about this business.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WILLARD MOORE is the manager of the Paramount Theatre in Des Moines, Iowa, one of the large Publix houses in the city, and we're glad to record that he is also a full-fledged Round Tabler at this writing. Moore operates under a vaudeville and picture policy and he should be able to furn sh the Club with some interesting slants.

MUSIC AND TALENT

STAGE SHOWS

New York Roxy

Week ending December 24

With Ruth Etting heading the list of attractions, the Roxy is offering the biggest stageshow in its history, this week. Miss Etting, in a stunning black and silver evening gown proves her title of "Sweet Singer of Sweet Songs." She is ably accompanied at the piano by Victor Briedis, whose tricky playing enhances Miss Etting's "sweet" singing. Her repertoire includes most of the numbers she has helped make popular. Her singing of "Ten Cents a Dance," modernized and made into a production number in which the Male Chorus and The Ballet Corps participate forced her to take two encores. This audience forgot their usual reluctance to applaud and gave Ruthie a great send-off.

The production "East Side," includes three changes of scenery, first of which is the Bowery, in which the Thirty-two Roxyettes do their usual fine dance work. They are followed by Borrah Minevitch, master of the harmonica, and his "musical rascals." He and his 12 boys offer a number of selections, difficult in the extreme, but easily played by them. Borrah's leadership of his aggregation is inimitable. This and the surprisingly fine music these boys get from the lowly harmonica are what have made them famous. Apparently the "Grand Central" scene was left out of the show caught, because "Park Avenue" featuring the Roxyettes and a corps of models followed Minevitch. Scene represents the exterior of the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, in front of which the Roxyettes, dressed in tuxedo coats and transparent trousers, offer another of their fine routines. Following this, the models, dressed in gorgeous evening, gowns, wrap and coats first make their entrance from prop automobiles and parade around stage.

"Peacock Alley," the interior of the hotel, is the next scene and in it, Josephine Lucchese, soprano, sings as the Ballet Corps perform. Patricia Bowman, dressed in gayly colored pajamas offers one of her sprightly and beautiful ballet routines as the ballet corp serve as a background for her. Patricia has been at this house a long time and her popularity apparently is on the increase instead of diminishing. The corps of models again display their beauty and gowns and then serve as a background as the De Marcos perform their graceful waltz and fox-trot dance routines, for the finale of the show.

This type show seemingly is just what this audience want and like.

Stage Director in East

Leon Leonidoff, Fanchon and Marco stage director, has returned to New York after six months at the F & M Hollywood studios. He will produce four Fanchon and Marco "Ideas" in the East.

Musicians' Benefit Planned

Paul Whiteman will present a symphonic jazz concert for the benefit of unemployed musicians at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, Sunday, February 28. Rudy Vallee will appear as guest conductor. The National Broadcasting Company has arranged the program in cooperation with Joseph N. Weber, president of the American Federation of Musicians.

STAGE SHOWS

San Francisco Warfield

Week ending December 23

San Francisco theatregoers are convinced that there is a Santa Claus and that he brought Paul Ash to the Warfield as a Christmas present to the city. Anyway, Paul is back among the scenes of his early triumphs, after an absence of almost seven years, and is receiving a tremendous reception, which is richly deserved. Incidentally, the Paul Ash of today is a very different man from the one who formerly appeared at the Imperial and Granada Theatres. Gone is the wavy mane which distinguished him in the old days and gone is the boisterous manner. He is much more quiet, much more the polished artist. He leads his men as a conductor, not as a pianist, speaks better and shows improvement in every way. The famous smile is the same.

The program commences with the strains of "California, Here I Come," and Paul breaks through a huge front page of the San Francisco Chronicle on which his homecoming is heralded in headline type. He finally stops the applause, tells of his exile of seven years and of his joy in being home again. The augmented band plays "Back in My Home Backyard," with the Three Cheers, "Eastern radio artists," finally crooning the words.

Paul tells of his long list of amusement "finds" and introduces Florence Hedges, a blond lyric soprano, who offers "Indian Love Call" and engages in some lively patter. The Three Cheers follow with "The Peanut Vender" and "When Yuba Plays the Rhumba," offering "Ain't That the Way It Goes?" as an encore. All three numbers are offered with radio broadcasting effect.

Fred Zimbalist, sensational harmonica player, offers "Rhapsody in Blue" and a group of Jewish numbers, which bring him a great hand.

Paul Ash reserves his latest discovery for the last of his program and suggests that in John Pope Jones, a young Negro singer, a real treat is in store for listeners. The young man lives up to the encomiums heaped upon him and offers "On the Road to Mandalay," "That's Why Darkies Are Born," from George White's "Scandals," presented with tableau effects, and "Chloe," rendered realistic with the use of magnified shadows. The young Negro has a voice that reminds one at once of George Dewey Washington, but he lacks the impeccable diction of that artist.

The homecoming of Paul Ash, who has been fortunate in gathering some exceptional talent about him, is proving a real triumph. Not in years has a show been as tumultously received at the Warfield as this one and it is to be hoped that Paul's engagement will be made a long one.

RKO Opens Vaudeville in 5 Cities During Holiday Week

RKO is opening vaudeville shows in five cities during the holiday week. The theatres include: The RKO Keith, Washington; Downtown, Detroit; Emboyd, Fort Wayne; Palace, South Bend; Regent, Grand Rapids.

All houses will use a combination film and stage show policy. The announcement follows similar plans by Publix and the Warner circuit for an expansion of the stage presentation policy.

Milady's Dream!

The mannequins came to the Roxy for the past week, and, as a result, the place looked like a miniature of the federal treasury. Armed guards took command, as better than 100 pieces of expensive fur from various establishments along Fifth Avenue were made ready for the parade of fashion which featured the Roxy stage presentation for the week. One sable, believe it or not, is said to be worth $50,000 alone. The total figure set on the 100 wrap-around pelts was over $1,000,000, which just isn't fair to man or beast. Expensive evening gowns and shoes added their bit to the housewife's dream which was contained in a heavily guarded strong room during the week.

STAGE SHOWS

Detroit Michigan

Week ending December 10

Audiences at the Michigan theatre this week are getting full value plus for their admission checks. The stage bill has that elusive something which has been conspicuous by its absence for many, many weeks, and the whole production smacks of showmanship.

Brooke Johns, in his second week as M. C., is getting away from his Paul Ash style of act introductions. The piece opens in front of the "Padlock Cafe," with the 12 Evans dancing girls dressed as policemen. Johns attempts to slip into the speakeasy, and is unceremoniously hauled off to jail in a police patrol, assembled on the stage by the girls.

The pull-away reveals the interior of a Harlem night club, with plenty of flash and color. Art Franks and his better half, offering an old man-spring chicken piece of business, start the ball rolling, and come back later in the show to do some plain and fancy stepping.

The Five Elgins, three men and two women, who juggle Indian clubs and hats, have about the most novel act of its kind this reviewer has had the pleasure of witnessing. They move rapidly, play 'em close to the chest, and click in a big way. This outfit could win in any house.

Morgan and Stone, a couple of banjo plunkers, are just that. Arthur Nealy, former St. Louis traffic cop, a "discovery" of Johns, has a nice voice for the two numbers he sings, the second as introduction for the fan dance of the Evans ballet. The girls have been well drilled for this number, waving large red and black ostrich feather fans while executing a charming routine.

Raymond Baird, another of Brooke Johns' proteges, does a repeat on "St. Louis Blues" on the saxophone. His concluding number is a sax duet, in which he plays two instruments at the same time. A nice piece of work, and well received. The lad previously had directed the Michigan pit orchestra through the regular overture in the absence of Eduard Werner, and acquitted himself nicely.

Johnny Tranberger (Tranbaw) and his young sister, Nancy, do things to the audience. Johnny sings while Nancy plays a half-pint piano. The kid's rendition of "Minnie de Moocher" is almost a show-stopper.

The bill is nicely balanced, and the stage setting more pretentious than usual. Ed Weisfeldt did a nice piece of work on the show.

STAGE SHOWS

Detroit Fisher

Week ending December 5

The big Third Anniversary show of the Fisher, presenting plenty of flash and class, dragged a bit after the first three acts, and folded up with a dull thud. Bob Nolan, as usual, was master of ceremonies. He didn't do much except announce the acts, and that was not so well done, either.

Page and Class, a pair of wire-walkers who also stepped off some lively paces, worked hard and were well received. Arthur Millard and Mina Marlin, featuring comedy patter and a few songs, got over in fair shape.

Latell and Dell, well remembered by the older patrons for Latell's work in "Buster Brown" as "Bonzo," the frisky bulldog, pulled many laughs. Miss Dell, as always, was pleasing.

Peter Higgins, tenor, with Frank Dixon at the piano, proved to be the high spot on the program. Higgins possesses a fine voice, has a pleasing appearance, and sells his stuff in the good old way of the dead-but-not-forgotten vaudeville days.

Naro Lockford and Company, a hard-working crew of dancers, put on straight numbers and follow up with a burlesque adagio which is funny even if it is slow. Steve Freda and Johnny Palace, a comedy pair with a guitar and the expression, "Ketch on?" give the audience the best reason for laughing. The Crystal Trio, roller-skaters, finish the show.

The bill has merit, but was poorly assembled and routined.

Milwaukee Wisconsin

Week ending December 17

Fanchon & Marco's "Co-ed" Idea opens with the mixed chorus of ten attired as gay college dudes stepping in a lively fashion. The background is then lifted to disclose a gymnasium with the orchestra on the stage attired in striped blue and gold jackets with skull caps to match.

The Doyle Quadruplets offer a harmony selection accompanied by a pianist and then do a dance bit. They are followed by three roller skaters, two men and a young woman, who whirl about in fine fashion and receive a goodly amount of applause.

Hubert Dyer sings 'Sweetheart of Sigma Chi" and "I'm Through With Love," while two specialty dancers attired in brilliant red pajamas do their stuff. They give way to the chorus, who dance and swing Indian clubs in a nonchalant manner, to the tune of "Betty Co-ed" and "Anchors Aweigh."

A girl sings "Now You're in My Arms," while the masculine member of the duo clowns about and also tampers with the Indian clubs in lively fashion. The two throw jokes back and forth at each other and all in all get a good reception. He also tap dances while she accompanies on the accordion.

The finale features the Accordion Sextet garbed in cadet uniforms of white, while the six young women of the chorus, completing the picture, are dressed in blue and carry walking sticks. The accordion masters play "Million Dollar Baby" and "St. Louis Blues." They present a pretty picture and their renditions are just as good.

Week ending December 11

Fanchon & Marco's "Art Gallery" Idea, with its gold and silver living statues, who came to life long enough to offer some excellent adagio dancing and some interesting acrobatic feats, provided a good evening's entertainment.

The act opened with Bob, Andy and Tod, tap dancing outside the Art Museum. Felovis, master juggler, twirled hat, ball and cane, but the outstanding feature of his act was the juggling of a lighted lamp with plates and a stick.

Eddie Cole, in the capacity of a director of one of the early Charlie Chaplin films, provided the comedy of the evening, humorous anticipatory remarks addressed to Charlie.

The doors of the Museum opened as the orchestra played "Pomp and Circumstance" displaying human figures in gold and silver leaf, representing famous groups of statuary, including "Cupid and Psyche," "The Thinker" and "The Disc Thrower," who held their poses as the Herculean Trio performed some unusual feats of strength and skill. They returned to their pedestals and Cupid and Psyche descended and gave a graceful adagio dance accompanied by a singer. One by one the statues came tolife and did various stunts and at the conclusion of the act resumed their original positions. Among those appearing on the stage were The Cachalots, Olga and Lester, La Marr Brothers, Mavis and Ted and Marion and Kathryne. The lighting effects throughout this number were beautiful and unusual.

SLICES OF MELLIN

By BOBBY MELLIN

My Christmas gifts to the following (if I could afford it):

Paul Whiteman—another "Rhapsody In Blue." Mildred Bailey—Paul Whiteman's diet. Roy Bargy—some old songs for the Maytag program. Ben Bernie—a courtesy card from the Admiration Cigar Company. Gus Kahn—more melody writers and publishers. Ted Weems—a publicity man to boost Weems. Harry Kogen—a local program. Amos and Andy—Andy to get Amos out of jail. Jack Lavin—new imitations. Mark Fisher—an even dozen children. Al Beilin—unbreakable matches. Joey Stool—Bobby Crawford again to have a million dollars. Chester Cohn—radio at 106. Sid Lorraine—a megaphone. Walter Donovan—an invention for quick hair growing. Tom, Dick and Harry—more Hoeffle arrangements. Carl Hoeffle—more Toms, Dicks and Harrys. Herbie Kay—a national reputation while still a youngster. Doris Robbins—her own band. Ted Lewis—more imitators. Pat Kennedy—a twenty-to-one shot. Al Goering—another pianist in Bernie's band. Micky Garlisch—a violin solo. Joe Dracca—ten terrific shows by special permission of the copyright owners. Ferde Grofe—another concert tour where he can take a bow. Bernie Cummins—another brother like Walter. Maurie Sherman—a world's championship for Tuffy Griffith.

Bing Crosby—a full-length portrait of Russ Columbo. Russ Columbo—a full-length portrait of Bing Crosby. Art Kahn—a piano recital at Orchestra Hall. Tweet Hogan—a local outlet on his chains. Billy White—high enough orchestrations. Henri Gendron—more recordings. Art Kassell—a real break. Don Pedro—an interest in the horse of the same name. Danny Russo—his old interest in WIBO. Clyde McCoy—a commercial contract. Jean Paul King—a microphone at his bed. Isham Jones—more time with Charlie Newman. Paul Specht—his old rating. Charlie Agnew—a pleasant trip from the Frolics to the Edgewater Beach. Don Bernard—a perfect bridge hand. Ted Cook—a wire at the Frolics. Jimmy Garrigan—an assistant arranger. Matt Malneck—what Paul Whiteman lost in weight. Brooks and Ross—their own army. Jane Froman—talking pictures. Johnny Fulton—television. The King's Jesters—Jest my good wishes.

Frankie Magine—a CBS or NBC chain. Sidney Berman—those fifty thousand copy order days. Irene Taylor—a world of success. Harry Reinhold—some new ribbers. Irving Aaronson—smooth sailing in all his ventures. Phil Saxe—a chance to play an instrument. Howard Barrie—more vocal choruses. Lee Sims and Illomay Bailey—a pent house. Vivian Janis—a musical comedy starring her. Milton Samuels—a published song. Izzy Ulman—a towel, for weeping purposes only. Willie Horowitz—a permanent beard remover and a thanks for assisting me in writing this week's column. Arthur Jarrett—Chicago's best wishes. Gene Arnold—a smash hillbilly.

Wayne King—another record like "Goodnight Sweetheart." Egbert Van Alstyne—those good old days. Verne Buck—the lead in a musical comedy. George Pincus—some dead fish for him to give away with every handshake. Clarence Parrish, a school house. Goldie—ten per cent in Swift & Co. Jimmy Hatton—good luck in his new job. Walter Hirsch—another Spitalny. Harry Woods—another eating place like Gus Kahn's and some new verses. Ed Dawson—a wish that I may be able to meet you in person.

Merry Christmas, folks, and here's hoping you will be full of the New Year's Spirit, and we mean it the way you read it.

ORGAN SOLOS

ALBERT HAY MALOTTE (Los Angeles Western) offered a very pleasing, though unpretentious solo built around the waltz hit, "Pagan Moon." His work is, at all times, that of the true artist. His registration is perfect, so that one may sit back and forget that it is merely another waltz that he is playing, and imagine that those same strains come from some old master. His fifteen minute recital (submerged in the pit) was also a treat, though played in rather a haphazard and undignified fashion. And in this reviewer's opinion a straight consistent program of three or four numbers played with the organ raised would be more entertaining and appreciated.

JOE STOVES (Jamaica Valencia) presented a community singing novelty which was both entertaining and topical. It is called "Football Fancies," and it incorporates a number of specially written versions together with some good singable tunes. The solo opens with a special chorus to the tune, "Collegiate," which is about the audience being the players and the organist the coach. This is followed by regular singing choruses of "You Try Somebody Else," "Love Letters," and a special to "Roll on Mississippi," "River, Stay 'way from My Door," special to "Gang's All Here," and a final chorus, backed up with scenes of football games on film as the organist plays "Anchor's Aweigh." A good solo, well presented and thoroughly enjoyed.

HENRIETTA KAMERN (New York 175th) presented a timely solo entitled "Football Fancies" for her solo this week. It was one, composed of the usual collegiate songs, interspersed with rare comedy and set to popular songs for the audience to sing. Though the house was but half full, those in it did their best to sing and applauded Miss Kamerns efforts at the finish. Besides being a very good musician, Miss Kamern is the fashion plate of the neighborhood. Her dark beauty was set off by a black and white evening gown, and the console was beautifully decorated.

EARL ABEL (San Antonio Texas) recently offered as his organ solo several peppy parodies on the following late song hits: "You Call It Madness"; "A Cottage For Sale" and "I'm Yours." Earl Abel displayed a sign on the console which read "Organ For Sale," and he announced that the house management was going to dispose of this mighty instrument if the patrons wouldn't sing every line of his song slides. The natives went for the gag in a big way, and did they sing? Thev did. Then the master of the singfest rendered "Good Night Sweetheart"; "I Don't Know Why," and "Sweet and Lovely," and "Shine On, Harvest Moon."

TED CRAWFORD (Santa Barbara Granada) offered one of the cleverest "community sings" of his engagement here. The title was "Local Boy Makes Good." The solo was conceived and used as a prologue to the feature picture of the same title. The theme was nothing like the picture but was a boost for local personages who have made good. Cleverly written special lyrics were used for this and Crawford naively brought out the fact that the audience singing would be instrumental in helping him "to make good."

They helped as much as they could, and that was by singing all the popular melodies he had chosen. Applause was tremendous. This type of solo that this organist is offering is helping him greatly and will assist in making the local papers carry items about another "local boy who makes good" if he continues to give them this fine entertainment.

KEN WIDENOR (New York 86th), who is guest organist here, presented a singing novelty called "Close-ups and Snap-shots." Songs used were "Can't Write the Words," "River Stay 'Way from My Door," "Moon Comes Over the Mountain," and "Faded Summer Love." Two tongue-twisters, a special, written about slogans on billboards, and a "challenge" chorus gave them plenty for the comedy angle. The solo was well received.

JACK WARD (New York Academy of Music) presented as a recent organ solo an original concoction entitled "Musical Mad-Mess." The entire solo, which featured special and regular choruses of popular songs, met with approval and the audience joined in the fun and lustily sang each number. Opening with a self-explanatory chorus to a popular tune, telling the audience the reasons for and fun derived by singing, a regular chorus of "Guilty" was sung by them. "In Your Arms," a special tongue-twister that was not only extremely laughable, but very witty as well, "One More Time" and "Happy When You're Happy," followed.

Ward used special cartoon slides and gags between songs, and also ad lib dialogue that enhanced the intimacy.

Of course, the stage-shows at this house are very long, but this reviewer cannot understand why this organist and his 10 minutes of real entertainment are not featured regularly. The applause at the finish certainly calls for it.

EGON DOUGHERTY (Astoria Triboro) offered a straight community sing. Though this type of work does not require all of Dougherty's ability as a musician, the audience want nothing other than singing and in this wise he is showing himself a clever fellow in giving them what they want.

He called the solo "Now It's Song Singing Time," and gave them the following to sing: "How's Your Uncle," "Can't Write the Words," "River, Stay 'Way From My Door," "Can't Stop Me From Loving You," "Without the Gal," and in closing "Some of These Days."

BOB WEST (Philadelphia Fox), funster of the organ, called his number a song marathon and received more than usual cooperation from the audience. The songs consisted of simple melodies, including "You've Brought a New Kind of Love to Me," "Constantinople," "Shine On Harvest Moon," "Good Night Sweetheart" and "Dancing With Corns on My Toes."

OVERTURES

RAYMOND BAIRD (Detroit, Michigan), acting as guest conductor in the absence of Eduard Werner, demonstrated that he is an accomplished musician as well as a sax tooter. Leading the Michigan orchestra through selections from Victor Herbert's "Fortune Teller," Baird commanded the attention of the audience from start to finish. The number opened with the March melody, then took up the waltz, "Lily and the Nightingale," "The Govette," "Gypsy Love Song," during which Baird offered a pleasing saxophone solo, and ending with "Czardas." The overture was well selected and pleasingly played by the 25 musicians.

GLENN WELTY (Milwaukee, Wisconsin) and his Winsconsin theatre orchestra offer "Martial Melodies" with Clark Parnell, tenor. Selections include "Pomp and Circumstance," "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers" and "I'm Marching Home to You," with Parnell singing the latter selection and accompanied by three drums and a quartet of trumpets.

ALFRED RICCI (New York 86th) and his RKOlians recently offered an overture of outstanding quality entitled "An Oriental Fantasy." This proved to be a cleverly arranged compilation of Oriental melodies. The unusual and novel arrangements of Ricci's overtures, together with the fine musicianship displayed by the orchestra are the reasons for their popularity and success.

DON ALBERT (Jersey City Jersey), conducting the Loew Grand Orchestra, presented his original arrangement of the "Slavic Rhapsody," as his overture this week. Half of this masterpiece was conducted and played in the usual manner but for the last half Don Albert conducted from the screen on a film made of himself. The oddity of seeing the musicians following the gestures and the time from the motion picture of the maestro was immensely entertaining and proved an applause-getting stunt.

WALT ROESNER (San Francisco Fox) and the Fox Concert Orchestra, offer a distinctive novelty in "California Overture," in which the history of the State and of San Francisco is depicted in music. The overture opens with the pealing of the Mission bells, followed by the strains of "Ramona" and Mexican airs. Then comes the music of the "Texas Tommy," a dance originated in San Francisco, tumultuous music suggested by the San Francisco fire, with fire scenes dimly shown on the curtain, and, as a finale, "California Here I Come" and "I Love You California." Joaquin Garay sings the Anson Weeks composition, "I'm Sorry Dear," whistling the air as an encore.

MAX BRADFIELD (Philadelphia Fox) took as the theme of his overture "I'm Through With Love," arranged in symphonic form, featuring Willard Singley. Bradfield conducted the orchestra in his usual capable manner.

WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

The big event facing local film folk is the testimonial dinner and smoker to be given in honor of Aaron Saperstein, Illinois Allied president, at the Congress hotel, January 5. Not in many years has a banquet in honor of a local personality struck such unanimous popular fancy. A tremendous turnout is already assured. Abram F. Myers, Al Steffes and other national directors of Allied will be on hand for the affair. All along the Row enthusiasm is running high over the idea of honoring Saperstein, whose untiring efforts and hard work over many weeks bore fruit in a satisfying settlement of the difficulties between Chicago theatres and the operators' union.

The spacious Kedzie theatre on the West Side will be opened Christmas day under the management of Sam Cohen. The policy will be feature pictures and vaudeville.

Max Slott is now general manager of theatres for Warners Brothers in Wisconsin, making his headquarters in Milwaukee.

Visitors from nearby towns spotted along the Row last week were: Art Nelson, booker for A. B. McCullon of Hoopeston, Ill.; J. M. Dunkin, who operates the Alhambra theatre, Decatur, Ill.; Fred Anderson of the Morris theatre, Morris, Ill., and Walter Fluegel of the Pekin and Empire theatres, Pekin, Ill.

Murray Starr of National Screen Service can certainly thank his lucky star that he is still "all there." Driving back from Cheyenne, Starr misjudged the road, sending his Chevvy down a cliff and just about completely demolishing it. But Starr's lucky star was with him and he came out practically uninjured.

Coming to the United Artists theatre soon: Bing Crosby in "Just One More Chance" and Gloria Swanson in "Tonight or Never." Write your own joke if it looks funny.

Carl Pierson of Westville, Ill., has taken over the Strand theatre at Petersburg, Ill.

A vigorous sales campaign will be instituted on Security product during January, the affair being the annual Irving Mandel month.

Dr. William Caton has entered the ranks of exhibitors, having taken over the Liberty theatre at Mason City, Mich.

Considerable interest is attached to the Balaban & Katz experiment of putting "Girl Crazy" on the Oriental stage. Opening was good, with line from the box office to Dearborn street a half hour before the box office opened.

Elmer Barker has closed the Harvard theatre at Harvard, Ill.

Offices of the Allied Theatre Owners of Illinois will move about January 1 from the present quarters at 1018 S. Wabash avenue to the fourth floor of the Standard Oil building, 910 S. Michigan avenue. It is understood that S. S. Epstein, a doctor, has joined the local Allied office as financial secretary.

Four Educational Comedies Are in Work at Coast Plant

Four new Educational comedies have been placed in production at the Coast studios. They include a new Hollywood Girls number, "Torchy's Two Toots," "Speed in the Gay Nineties" and "Night Shirt Parade," the last two being Mack Sennett efforts.

The Loew circuit of greater New York has signed for the Sennett comedy, "The Pottsville Palooka," for a minimum of 150 days. "One More Chance," second Bing Crosby, Sennett number, will play both Rivoli and Rialto in New York by a deal just closed with Publix.

Named General Manager

Harry Payntor, Toronto, has been named general manager of Vitagraph, Limited, Toronto, distributing Warner and First National product in Canada. Frank Meyers has become associated with Ray Lewis in the new British International Films of Canada, Limited.

Named MPTO Representative

SOUND REPRODUCTION

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 110—(A) Name the various things to be examined and tested before each show is started. (B) Tell us how you would mark the projector so that the exact point at which the intermittent movement has started to start or stop may be instantly, conveniently and exactly determined. (C) Describe the correct method of handling records and placing them on the turntable. (D) How fast does the turntable rotate? (E) What may be the effect of holding the hand upon the turntable to make a quick stop? (F) What will be the effect of any variation in turntable speed?

Answer to Question No. 104

Question No. 104 was: "(A) Tell us how to locate or install a spare RCA exciting lamp. (B) Tell us just in what way it is provided that RCA exciting lamp filament will always be square with the slit and at the right distance from the optical system condenser. (C) Describe the RCA exciting lamp optical system. (D) What are the dimensions of the light beam when it reaches the sound track?

The following answered acceptably, those whose names are followed by an asterisk () having done exceptionally well: Lester Borst, Van Buskirk and Kroll*, C. Rau and S. Evans*, Roy J. Arntson, Herman Billings*, George A. Artley*, Thos. McGruder, G. E. Doe, B. G. Anden, Pat O'Brien*, P. L. Toeping, Tom Kay, Henry Edwards*, W. D. Samuels, John Sloan, A. F. Boe, Wm. Bogart, T. Van Vaulkenburg, Bill Doe*, T. Wylie, Jack Thomas*, D. Fausett, Lester Daniels, Jack Billings, Thomas Rodney, Jerry Davis, H. D. Cole, George Richards*, Andy Bailey, Robert Banning, Dick L. Johnson, Dan Graves, Dave Saunders, James Devoy*, Robert Singleton, D. L. Warren, Geo. Daniels, W. D. Samuels, Dave Straton, D. Hotaling, P. T. Turner, Andrews and Thomas, S. Kay, Peter Cermak, Frank Oliver, John Handley, F. T. Leroy, Larry Tipton*, Will Peck, Harry Lidding, D. L. Simmons, Larry James*, H. D. Schofield, Dan Peters, Wm. Gibson, James Hackett, D. H. Michelson, John Williams, J. Ledbetter, Alonzo Zerach*, John Tupton, G. L. Detrich, Chas. L. Goldman, Frank Borker, Larry Calmann, Lon Schaeffer, Frank D. True, D. R. Robbins and Sam Gregeson.

Choice for publication lay between Evans & Rau, Van Buskirk and Kroll and George A. Artley. Their answers being essentially equal in correctness. After reading them all again, however, I believe Messrs. Evans & Rau have a wee bit the best of it. They say:

"(A) In the RCA Type PS-1, PS-5, PS-6 and PS-8 sound heads, it is only necessary to rotate the exciting lamp turret a third of a turn to bring a new exciting lamp into operation. Three exciting lamps are mounted on a turret in these types of sound heads, and all are kept in correct adjustment so that when one becomes defective, another can be quickly and easily brought into operation. The only adjustment necessary when mounting the lamps is the vertical adjustment. The lamps are adjusted by raising or lowering them in their sockets until they give a round circle of light on a card placed between the sound gate and the photo-electric cell housing. The circle of light must be complete and free from shadows. The exciter lamp assembly used in the RCA Types PS-14 and PS-16 sound heads differ from the above in that no turret is used. The lamp socket is mounted on a bracket, is guided into the proper place by long pins, and is held in place by friction, so that the lamp and socket assembly can be removed and replaced quickly without affecting its adjustment. A spare socket is supplied with the equipment and a spare exciting lamp should be set up in the extra socket, adjusted and set aside for emergency use.

"(B) So that RCA exciting lamp filaments will always be square with the slit and at right distance from the optical system condenser, the base of each lamp is fitted with a locating pin which fits into a slot in the socket. The socket itself is so located upon the turret that all socket slots are in precisely the same circumferential position. The locating pin on the lamp is placed in the precise position which will bring the filament in its correct location with relation to the optical axis of the system when the lamp is put into a socket, except that it may be too high or too low, in which case it must be raised or lowered, as may be necessary to bring it into correct adjustment.

"(C) The RCA exciting lamp optical system consists of the exciting lamp and the slit assembly. The slit assembly consists of a metal barrel containing a condenser, slit and objective lens. The condenser is composed of two plano-convex lenses about one inch in diameter, their convex surfaces facing each other, the apex of the surfaces separated by the small fraction of an inch. These lenses concentrate the light from the exciting lamp filament upon the slit, which is an opening located in a horizontal position, No. .510 of an inch wide by .006 of an inch high, so placed that its width is precisely at right angles with an imaginary line drawn from its center to the center of the sound track. The light passing through the slit emerges in a thin beam of light and is further reduced in dimensions by the small objective lens, which focuses the beam upon the film sound track.

"(D) According to RCA the dimensions of the beam of light when it reaches the sound track should be .00075 of an inch high and exactly .070 of an inch wide."

THEATRE, NOT STUDIO, IS JUDGE

A West Coast production official, in communicating with an eastern official with regard to the dimensions of camera and projector apertures, said: "Any standardization of camera apertures should not be based upon projection or theatre considerations, which are highly variable, but should originate at the source of manufacture, where uniform conditions can be maintained."

Such things as camera aperture dimensions should not be based upon studio practice. Camera apertures should and, for best results, must be considered wholly on the basis of what dimensions will produce the best results in the greatest number of theatres. True, projection conditions, including projection angles, vary widely. However, there certainly is something of a general average, in projection angles at least, and that average should be ascertained and the camera aperture dimensions which will give the best results at the average should, as a matter of common sense, be adopted.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut toward such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

NOW YOU'VE GOT SOMETHING BETTER TO SELL

THE best way to boost business is to offer greater value. In movies it's greater pleasure. Now you can give your patrons just that. You've got something better to sell. Eastman Super-sensitive, the most widely used negative film in the industry, results in better-directed, better-acted, better-photographed, better-finished pictures. And, whether your patrons are entirely aware of all these improvements or not, the fuller satisfaction they get will automatically show in your box-office receipts.

ROBERT COOGAN

Grand Entertainment for any season; but especially good for Christmas Vacation crowds. • Opened Saturday for long run at RIVOLI THEATRE, NEW YORK. Not just a kid picture, —a human, believable story right from your own heart. It packs a tremendous appeal for boys and girls of all ages. • Directed by Norman Taurog, who made "Skippy". With the same "Skippy" cast including ENID BENNETT, WILLARD ROBERTSON and HELEN JEROME EDDY. "SOOKY"—it's good for your box office!
